Examples

Tony Berber Sardinha
Pontifical Catholic University of São Paulo (PUCSP)

Andressa Salaru
Pontifical Catholic University of São Paulo (PUCSP)

Version of March 20, 2026 3:33pm -03:00

Contents

1 POS Dim 1 1

2 NEG Dim 1 23

3 POS Dim 2 27

4 NEG Dim 2 47

5 POS Dim 3 53

6 NEG Dim 3 66

1 POS Dim 1

Text Sample 1: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 91.00 – generic_gpt/t1839_gpt.txt
I don't really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but lately it feels like I 'm slowly disappearing from my own life. I 'm in this weird place where, on paper, I 'm " fine. " I have a job, I pay my bills, I answer emails, I say " not much, you? " when people ask how I 'm doing. I show up, I smile, I make small talk. But underneath that, it 's like there 's this constant, low-level ache of being alone that never really goes away. What 's messing with me is that I 'm not completely isolated. I have acquaintances. People at work know my name. Sometimes I even get invited to group things, like birthday drinks or office lunches. But I always feel like an extra. Like if I stopped showing up, the dynamic wouldn't change. They might notice once, say " oh, where 's [me]? " and then just move on. I miss feeling known. I miss when people used to text me just to send a dumb meme or ask how my day was, not because they needed something or it was part of a group chat. I scroll through my messages and it 's basically a graveyard of old conversations that just … faded. No fights, no drama, just slowly shorter replies until nothing. I 've tried to " fix " it. I 've joined clubs, gone to meetups, tried to be more open and vulnerable in conversations. But there 's this wall I can't seem to get past. I can talk about surface stuff, even share a few personal things, but I never feel that click where you realize, " Oh, this person actually sees me. ” I always feel like I ’m performing a version of myself that ’s easier to like. Nights are the worst. I come home, eat alone, sit on my phone, watch other people ’s lives happening in real time. Group photos, inside jokes, “ had the best night with my favorite people. ” I ’m happy for them in theory, but it also feels like I ’m standing outside a house in winter, looking through the window at everyone else sitting by the fire. I don’t even know what I ’m expecting from posting this. I guess I just wanted to put it somewhere instead of letting it bounce around in my head. It ’s tiring, feeling this invisible all the time.

Text Sample 2: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 85.00 – generic_gpt/t2641_gpt.txt
I don’t really know how to talk about this in real life, so I ’m dumping it here instead. Lately I ’ve been feeling this weird combination of being “ connected ” and completely alone at the same time. I have people I message, group chats that ping all day, social media feeds that never end, but when I close my phone, the silence in my room feels almost physical. It ’s like all those little interactions are just background noise, and underneath it there ’s this heavy, empty space. I ’m not totally isolated. I have coworkers, some acquaintances, people I can be “ friendly ” with. But I don’t feel known by anyone. Conversations stay on the surface : work, memes, weekend plans. I can be standing in a room full of people and feel like I ’m behind glass. They see a version of me, but it ’s like I ’m not really there. I ’ve tried to “ fix ” it in the ways you ’re supposed to. I joined a hobby group. I go to social events sometimes, even when I don’t feel like it. I make small talk, ask questions, try to be interested. Then I come home and feel more drained and alone than I did before, because it just reminds me that I don’t really belong anywhere. I ’m always the extra person, the one who ’s there but not essential, the one people are fine with but wouldn’t really miss. What bothers me most is how it ’s changing me. I can feel myself getting quieter, more withdrawn. I start second-guessing everything I say, assuming people are just being polite. I replay interactions in my head and pick apart every awkward pause. Sometimes I cancel plans last minute because the idea of sitting in a group and still feeling lonely is somehow worse than just staying home. Nights are the hardest. That ’s when it hits me that no one is going to text to check in, no one is wondering how my day went, no one is saving stories to tell me later. I scroll, I watch random videos, I listen to podcasts just to have some kind of human voice in the background. Then I wake up and do it all again. I don’t really know what I ’m expecting by posting this. I just needed to put it somewhere outside my own head for a while.

Text Sample 3: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 84.00 – generic_gpt/t2659_gpt.txt
I don’t really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but I feel like I ’m slowly disappearing from everyone ’s life while still being physically present. On paper I ’m not “ alone. ” I have a job, coworkers who are polite, a couple of old friends I text every now and then, family members who send the occasional “ how are you ” message. But none of it feels like it actually touches me. It ’s like I ’m behind glass, watching my own life from the outside. I go through the motions : wake up, commute, work, scroll on my phone, pretend to laugh at things, come home, eat something random, and then just sit there. I keep the TV or YouTube on just for background noise so the silence doesn’t feel so heavy. I keep checking my phone hoping someone will message me first, and most of the time it 's just notifications from apps I don't care about. When I do talk to people, it feels like I 'm playing a character who 's more socially acceptable than the real me. I make small talk, I say " I 'm fine, " I ask questions back so they won't notice I 'm not actually sharing anything. I can't remember the last time I was fully honest with someone about how lonely I feel without worrying they 'd see me as needy or pathetic. What really messes with my head is that I used to have real connections. In school and a bit in college, there were people who actually knew me. Over time everyone drifted away, got partners, moved, got busy. I know that 's normal, but it feels like I got left at the train station while everyone else 's life took off. I 'm stuck replaying old memories because I don't have many new ones that involve actual closeness. I 've tried to " fix " this the way people suggest—joining groups, trying hobbies, being more " open"—but I always end up feeling like an extra in everyone else 's story. People are friendly enough, but it doesn't go deeper. I leave, go home, and the emptiness hits even harder, like proof that there 's something about me that just doesn't stick with anyone. I don't even know what I 'm asking for. I just needed to put this somewhere, because keeping it in my head all the time is starting to feel like it 's swallowing me.

Text Sample 4: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 83.00 – generic_gpt/t467_gpt.txt
I don't really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but lately it feels like my life is just … empty space filled with noise. I 'm technically " not alone. " I have coworkers, some acquaintances, a family that texts occasionally, group chats that light up with memes. But none of it feels like it actually touches me. It 's like everyone is behind glass and I 'm waving from the other side, and they either don't see me or just assume I 'm fine because I can still crack a joke and reply with emojis. The weird thing is I used to think loneliness meant having no one. But it 's more like having people around and still feeling like you 're on mute. I go through the motions : wake up, work, pretend to be normal in front of others, come home, scroll through social media, watch other people 's lives happen. Then I lie in bed with this heavy feeling in my chest, like I 'm missing something huge I can't even name. I don't really talk about this in real life. When I try to open up, it feels like I 'm burdening people or being " too much. " I 've had a few moments where I started to say, " I 've been feeling really alone lately, " and the conversation somehow slid back into small talk about shows or work or whatever. I don't even blame them. I just feel stupid for trying. There 's also this growing fear that I 'm slowly becoming someone who doesn't know how to connect anymore. I overthink every message I send, every pause in conversation, every time someone doesn't reply. I replay interactions in my head and pick them apart, wondering if I sounded weird or clingy. Then I pull back a bit more, tell myself it 's easier not to expect anything. Days blend together. Sometimes I 'll go the whole weekend without using my voice out loud, and I don't notice until I have to talk to someone and my throat feels tight and unused. It 's unsettling, realizing how easy it is to disappear from other people 's lives without anyone really noticing, including your own.

Text Sample 5: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 83.00 – generic_gpt/t2316_gpt.txt
I don't really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but I feel like I 'm living next to my own life instead of inside it. On paper, I 'm not "

alone. ” I have coworkers, acquaintances, a couple of people I could technically text if I really needed something. I show up to work, make small talk about TV shows, complain about the weather, laugh at the right moments. People would probably describe me as “ nice ” or “ quiet but friendly. ” But once I get home and close the door, it ’s like the world just forgets I exist, and honestly, I kind of forget too. What messes with my head is that I don’t even know how to bridge the gap between “ friendly ” and “ actually close. ” I watch other people slip into friendships so easily—inside jokes, group chats buzzing all day, weekend plans that just seem to form out of nowhere. Meanwhile, I ’m sitting there overthinking whether sending a meme to someone is “ too much ” or if I ’ll come across as annoying. I ’m tired of being the person who only gets invited as an afterthought, or not at all. I ’m tired of realizing that if I stopped initiating with the few people I do talk to, the conversations would just die. It makes me feel like a placeholder in other people ’s lives, someone they don’t dislike but don’t really think about either. It ’s not like I haven’t tried. I ’ve joined clubs, gone to meetups, forced myself into situations that are uncomfortable for me as an introvert. I show up, I smile, I try to be interested in others. But the connections never seem to stick. People are polite, then they drift back into their established circles, and I ’m left orbiting on the outside again. The worst part is the way loneliness seeps into everything. It ’s not just about not having plans on a Friday night. It ’s eating dinner at my table and realizing I haven’t heard my own voice out loud all day. It ’s having something funny or upsetting happen and instinctively reaching for my phone, then remembering there ’s no one I feel close enough to share it with. It ’s scrolling through my contacts and realizing there isn’t a single person I ’d feel comfortable calling just to talk. I don’t even know what I ’m expecting by posting this. I guess I just wanted to put it into words somewhere, because keeping it all in my head makes it feel even heavier.

Text Sample 6: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 82.00 – generic_gpt/t555_gpt.txt
I ’ve been feeling this strange mix of invisible and “ too much ” at the same time, and I don’t really know where else to put it, so I ’m dumping it here. I ’m at that point in life where everyone seems to have moved into their own orbit — partners, kids, stable friend groups, group chats that actually stay active — and I ’m just kind of … orbiting nothing. I talk to people every day at work, I make small jokes, I ’m “ easy to talk to, ” but when I come home, it ’s like I just vanish. My phone goes silent. No one is waiting for me to show up online, no one is wondering how my day went. If I didn’t message first, I don’t think I ’d hear from anyone for weeks. What messes with my head is how performative everything feels. I ’ve become really good at playing the role of the “ chill, okay person ” because it ’s easier than trying to explain that I ’m lonely in a way that doesn’t make sense from the outside. People see that I have coworkers, acquaintances, a family that ’s technically there, and they assume that adds up to “ not alone. ” But none of those connections feel like places I can land. It ’s all surface-level, like I ’m permanently stuck in the small-talk stage of every relationship. I notice I ’ve started editing myself down when I do talk to people. I don’t say the weird things I ’m actually thinking, I don’t share stuff that matters to me unless I ’m almost sure it ’ll be received well. I guess I ’m scared that if I show the full version of myself, it ’ll just confirm this feeling that I ’m fundamentally not someone people choose. So I end up being this watered-down version of myself that even I don’t particularly like, and then I feel even more disconnected. Nights are the worst. That 's when it hits me that there 's no one I can text something mundane to, like " I saw this and thought of you, " because there isn't really a " you " in my life that fits that. I scroll, I lurk, I watch other people 's conversations happen in real time, and it 's like pressing my face against a window from the outside. I don't really know what I 'm looking for by writing this. I just wanted to put into words that I exist, that I 'm here, and that it feels like no one in my real life has noticed in a very long time.

Text Sample 7: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 81.00 – generic_gpt/t1709_gpt.txt

I 've been feeling this weird, heavy kind of loneliness lately that doesn't really fit into any of the usual categories people talk about. I 'm not totally isolated. I work, I talk to coworkers, I answer messages in group chats. On paper I 'm " connected. " But it all feels like I 'm playing a role in other people 's lives instead of actually being in them. Most of my interactions feel like background noise. Small talk, memes, work-related stuff, surface-level updates. I can go days without anyone asking me how I 'm really doing in a way that suggests they actually want to know. When I try to open up a bit, the conversation either gets redirected or brushed off with a joke. I end up feeling like I overshared, even if I only said one honest sentence. What makes it worse is that I used to have people I felt close to. Not many, but enough that I felt like I had a " home base " in the world. Over time, life just pulled us in different directions. People moved, got into serious relationships, became busy with kids or careers. We still " keep in touch " in the vaguest sense, but it 's more like we 're watching each other 's lives from the outside rather than living anything together. I 've tried to meet new people, but I 'm at this age where everyone already seems to have their established circle. I always feel like the extra person tagging along, the one who can be there or not and it wouldn't really change anything. I 'm present, but not essential. Replaceable. The part that really messes with me is how invisible this feels. From the outside, I probably look fine. I show up, I smile, I contribute to conversations. Nobody sees that I go home and just sit in the quiet, scrolling on my phone because I don't know what else to do with myself. I keep wanting to send a message that just says, " I feel really alone right now, " but I don't know who I 'd send it to, or what I 'd even want them to say back. There 's this constant ache of wanting to be known, really known, and at the same time feeling like I 've forgotten how to let anyone that close. I 'm not sure if I 've built walls or if people just stopped trying to look over them. Maybe both. All I know is that I 'm tired of feeling like a side character in my own life.

Text Sample 8: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 81.00 – generic_gpt/t1888_gpt.txt

I 've been feeling this weird combination of invisible and " too much " at the same time, and I don't really know where else to put it, so here it goes. On paper, my life looks fine. I have a job, a place to live, people I can technically contact if I need something. But I don't feel actually known by anyone. Most of my interactions are surface-level : work small talk, occasional memes in group chats, the " we should catch up sometime " messages that never turn into anything real. I keep thinking I 'm part of people 's lives, then I realize I 'm more like a background character. I 've noticed that when I 'm around people, I feel lonelier than when I 'm alone. It 's like there ’s this glass wall between me and everyone else. I can see them laughing and connecting, but I can’t seem to join in properly. I either talk too much because I ’m nervous and trying to fill the silence, or I shut down completely and just listen, then go home and overanalyze every word I said. I also feel like I missed some critical social development stage. Other people seem to just know how to maintain friendships, how often to text, how to ask to hang out without sounding desperate or annoying. For me, every message feels like I ’m imposing. I wait for people to reach out first, they don’t, and then I use that as proof that I don’t matter that much to them. Nights are the worst. I lie in bed scrolling, seeing people posting photos with their friends, partners, families. I know social media is curated, but it still stings. I keep thinking, “ No one is thinking about me right now. If I disappeared, it would take a while before anyone noticed. ” I ’m not even sure what I ’m hoping for by posting this. I guess I just wanted to put it somewhere outside my own head for once.

Text Sample 9: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 81.00 – generic_gpt/t2407_gpt.txt
I ’ve been struggling with a very specific kind of loneliness lately, and I don’t really know what to do with it anymore. On paper, I ’m not “ alone. ” I have coworkers I get along with, a couple of friends I see once in a while, family I text with. But I feel like I ’m living behind a pane of glass. I ’m there, visible, technically part of things, but it all feels like I ’m watching someone else ’s life from the outside. I keep noticing how surface-level most of my interactions are. At work we talk about projects, TV shows, the weather, the usual “ How was your weekend? ” stuff. With friends it ’s memes, group chats, and meeting up for drinks every few weeks. It all looks normal, but I never feel like I ’m actually known. If I disappeared, I ’m not sure anyone would really notice for a while, just that the group chat got a bit quieter. I think what I ’m missing is that feeling of being someone ’s “ person. ” Not in a romantic-only sense, just … someone who thinks of you first, who wants to tell you news as it happens, who checks in without it feeling like a chore. I don’t have that. I ’m always the one reaching out, organizing, asking how people are. When I stop, everything just goes silent. It ’s messing with my sense of self-worth more than I want to admit. I start assuming I ’m boring or draining or just not that important. I replay conversations later and pick apart every awkward pause, every time I maybe overshared or made a joke that didn’t land. Then I pull back, which just makes the distance worse. Nights are the hardest. I ’ll be lying in bed, scrolling, seeing everyone ’s photos with friends, partners, families, and I feel this heavy, physical ache in my chest. I want to send a “ hey, are you awake? ” message to someone, but there isn’t anyone I feel close enough to for that to not be weird. So I just put my phone down and stare at the ceiling. I don’t even know if I ’m looking for advice. I just needed to say this somewhere. It ’s exhausting to keep pretending I ’m fine when I feel this empty and disconnected most of the time.

Text Sample 10: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 81.00 – generic_gpt/t020_gpt.txt
I don’t really know how to say this in a way that doesn’t sound dramatic, but I feel like I ’m living my life behind glass. On paper, I ’m “ fine. ” I have a job, I respond to messages, I show up when I ’m supposed to. People would probably describe me as quiet but “ nice. ” I make small talk about work, the weather, whatever show is popular. I smile, I nod, I laugh at the right times. Then I go home and it 's like I evaporate. No one notices that part. What 's getting to me lately is this sense that I 'm " around people " all the time but not actually with anyone. At work, everyone has their little groups. They talk about weekend trips, brunches, game nights. I 'm always just close enough to overhear plans, never close enough to be included. I stand there pretending to be busy on my phone so it doesn't look as awkward as it feels. I 've tried to put myself out there. I 've gone to meetups, joined group chats, even forced myself to start conversations. It always ends the same way : a few surface-level interactions that slowly fade out, like I 'm forgettable background noise. I don't think people dislike me ; it 's more like I 'm just … not anyone 's first choice. Or second. Or third. The worst part is how it messes with my sense of reality. I start wondering if maybe I 'm actually really boring, or off-putting in ways I can't see. I replay every conversation, every silence, every time someone 's eyes drift past me to someone more interesting. It 's exhausting to constantly feel like you 're auditioning for a role in other people 's lives and never getting the part. Nights are the hardest. I come home, put my stuff down, and the silence just hits me. No one asking how my day was, no one to vent to, no one to sit next to on the couch doing nothing. I scroll through social media and it feels like watching a world I 'm not part of. Everyone seems to have " their people. " I have … me. I don't even know what I 'm hoping for by posting this. Maybe I just wanted to put it somewhere other than my own head for once.

Text Sample 11: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 80.00 – generic_gpt/t2731_gpt.txt
I don't really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but I feel like I 've slowly become invisible in my own life. I 'm in my late twenties, have a job, pay my bills, make small talk with coworkers, and on paper I look " fine. " But most days I go home, shut the door, and it 's like I just disappear. No one texts unless I text first. Group chats keep going without me. If I stop reaching out, everything just…goes quiet. I 'm not completely isolated. I have " people " in my life, but they feel more like acquaintances I orbit around than anyone I 'm truly close to. Conversations stay on the surface : work, memes, random news. I can't remember the last time someone genuinely asked how I was and actually wanted the real answer. When I try to open up a bit, the topic gets changed or brushed off with a joke. What makes it worse is this constant voice in my head saying it 's my fault. That I 'm boring, too quiet, too weird, too " much " when I do try to be honest. I replay interactions for hours, thinking about what I said wrong, why they didn't respond, why plans never seem to include me unless I invite myself. I scroll through social media and see people posting photos with friends, partners, families. Even people who say they 're " introverts " still seem to have a small circle. I don't even know how to build that. I feel like I missed some crucial stage where everyone else learned how to form real connections, and now I 'm just stuck watching from the outside.

Text Sample 12: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 80.00 – generic_gpt/t2402_gpt.txt
I 've been feeling like a ghost who still has to show up to work every day. On paper, I 'm " fine. " I have a job, a place to live, people I interact with. But everything feels like background noise. I talk to coworkers, I say " good weekend? " on Mondays, I laugh at the right times. Then I go home and it

’s like the sound just cuts out. I ’m alone with this heavy quiet that almost feels physical. What ’s messing with me is that I ’m not completely isolated in the obvious ways. I have a few people I could text. Sometimes I do. The conversations are shallow though—memes, random comments, logistics. I can’t remember the last time I felt like I could say, “ I ’m really not okay, ” and have anyone actually stay in that space with me instead of changing the subject or throwing a quick “ you ’ll be fine ” at it. I ’ve tried to “ fix ” it the usual ways—joining clubs, going to events, trying to be more social. I can show up and talk to people, but it feels like I ’m always on the outside of something everyone else seems to naturally understand. They slip into groups and inside jokes and easy familiarity, and I ’m standing right there but somehow not actually in it. Like I ’m watching them through a window. Sometimes I start to wonder if there ’s just something fundamentally off about me that other people can sense. Not in a dramatic “ I ’m the worst person ever ” way, more like a subtle wrong frequency—close enough to pass, but not close enough for anyone to really lock onto. I get home after social stuff and replay every interaction, picking apart the weird pauses and awkward jokes, and it just confirms the feeling that I don’t quite fit anywhere. What scares me is how normal this has started to feel. The routines of it : work, home, screen, bed. The constant low-level ache of wanting someone to really know me and not having the faintest idea how to make that happen without coming across as needy or strange. It ’s like I ’m drifting further out, and everyone else is on shore, busy with their own lives, not even noticing there was someone standing near them in the first place.

Text Sample 13: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 80.00 – generic_gpt/t1229_gpt.txt
I don’t really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but lately it feels like I ’m living behind glass. On paper, I ’m “ fine. ” I have a job, I pay my bills, I occasionally go out with coworkers, my family texts me memes. There ’s nothing obviously wrong. But I feel like I ’m just … not actually there. Like I ’m role-playing a normal person while the real me is somewhere far away, watching. The loneliness isn’t loud. It ’s this low, constant hum. I can be in a room full of people and still feel like I ’m on mute. Everyone else seems to have this invisible thread connecting them to someone : group chats that are actually active, people who call “ just to talk, ” someone who would notice if they disappeared for a day. I don’t feel like I have that. If I went quiet, I think people would just assume I was busy and move on. I ’ve tried to be more social. I say yes to invites when they come (they don’t come often), I try to start conversations, I ask people questions. But I always feel like the extra person. The one you ’re polite to, but don’t really think about later. There ’s this awkward moment when everyone else is talking to “ their person ” and I ’m just standing there, pretending to check my phone like it ’s urgent. What really gets to me is not having anyone I can be unfiltered with. I have “ people to talk to, ” in the shallow sense, but not anyone I can text at 2am and say, “ I feel like I ’m falling apart, ” without worrying I ’m being too much, too needy, too heavy. So I keep everything on the surface. I talk about shows, work, random news. Meanwhile there ’s this whole storm going on inside that never really comes out. Sometimes I catch myself rehearsing conversations in my head that will never happen. Imagining what it would be like to have someone actually see me, remember little details about me, ask how I really am and mean it. It feels pathetic to admit that, but it ’s true. I don’t even know what I ’m looking for posting this.

I guess I just wanted to put it somewhere outside my own head for once.

Text Sample 14: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 80.00 – generic_gpt/t2079_gpt.txt
I don't really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but I feel like I 'm living next to my own life instead of in it. On paper, I 'm " fine. " I have a job, I pay my bills, I talk to people every day. I answer emails, I join meetings, I nod along in conversations about weekend plans that never include me. I 'm surrounded by noise and still feel like I 'm in a soundproof box. People see me, but it doesn't feel like anyone actually sees me. The weird thing is, I used to have friends. Not a huge group, but enough that I felt like I belonged somewhere. Over time, everyone just … drifted. People moved, got partners, had kids, found new friend groups. I didn't do anything dramatic to push them away ; I just became the person you " mean to catch up with soon " and never actually do. I scroll through social media and see them all together, and it 's like watching an alternate timeline where I didn't get left behind. I try to reach out sometimes. I 'll type a message, stare at it, rewrite it, then either send it and get a polite but distant reply, or delete it and tell myself it was stupid anyway. I 'm constantly torn between wanting connection and being terrified of being annoying or unwanted. I overanalyze every silence, every " seen " without a response, every " we should hang out sometime " that never turns into a plan. I 've also noticed I 've started lying by omission. When people ask what I did over the weekend, I 'll say, " Just relaxed, " instead of " I sat alone in my room and tried not to think about how no one texted me. " It feels shameful to admit how empty my life is outside of work and errands. Like there 's something fundamentally wrong with me that everyone else can sense. Nights are the worst. That 's when everything gets loud in my head. I replay old conversations, think about people I haven't spoken to in years, wonder if they ever think about me. I keep my phone nearby even though it almost never lights up with anything personal. I still check it too often, like I 'm waiting for something that 's not coming. I don't even know what I 'm looking for posting this. I just needed to put it somewhere that isn't just inside my own head.

Text Sample 15: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 79.00 – generic_gpt/t2287_gpt.txt
I don't really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but lately it feels like my life is just … background noise. I 'm not completely isolated. I have coworkers I chat with, a couple of old friends I send memes to, family group chats that light up on holidays. So on paper I 'm " not alone. " But it feels like I 'm just orbiting everyone else 's lives instead of actually being in them. I notice it most in the quiet parts of the day. I 'll have something happen—good or bad—and realize there 's no one I instinctively want to tell. Or I 'll scroll through my contacts and realize that every name comes with a hesitation : " We haven't talked in a while, this will be weird " or " They 're probably busy, I don't want to bother them. " So I don't message anyone. Then I feel even more distant, which makes it harder the next time. It 's like a slow erosion. Social media makes it worse. I see people posting group photos, inside jokes in the comments, tagging each other in everything. I 'm there too, technically, but more like a ghost watching from the sidelines. Sometimes I 'll leave a comment and it just gets buried under everyone else 's, and I feel stupid for even trying to wedge myself into a space that clearly isn't mine. I 'm also tired of being the one who reaches out first. I 've noticed that if I stop initiating, things just … stop. No one checks in, no one says " hey, haven't heard from you in a while. " Days turn into weeks, and the silence kind of confirms this fear that maybe I was never that important to anyone in the first place. Just convenient when I happened to be around. The worst part is how it 's changing me. I can feel myself becoming more awkward, more withdrawn. When I 'm actually around people, I second-guess everything I say. I replay conversations later and cringe at myself, convinced I came off as weird or boring. It 's exhausting. I don't even know what I 'm hoping for by writing this. Maybe I just needed to say out loud that I feel invisible most of the time, even when I 'm technically " with " people. It 's a strange kind of loneliness : not the absence of others, but the absence of feeling like I matter to anyone in a real way.

Text Sample 16: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 79.00 – generic_gpt/t735_gpt.txt

I don't really know how to say this in a way that doesn't sound dramatic, but lately it feels like my life is happening behind glass. On paper I 'm not " alone. " I have coworkers, a couple of old friends I text sometimes, family chats that light up with memes and logistics. But I feel like I 'm always slightly out of phase with everyone else, like I 'm there physically but not really with them. I go days without using my voice for anything besides " thank you " at a checkout or " have a good one " at work. I 'll rehearse conversations in my head—what I 'd say if someone actually asked how I 'm doing, what I 'd tell a friend if I felt safe enough to be honest—and then the moment passes and I just default to " I 'm fine, you? " because I don't want to make things weird. The weird part is I 'm not even sure what I 'm missing anymore. I don't know if it 's a romantic partner, deeper friendships, or just one person who genuinely wants to know what my day looked like. I scroll through social media and see people posting group photos, trips, little inside jokes in the comments, and I feel like I 'm watching a life I somehow didn't qualify for. I try to reach out sometimes. I 'll send a message, suggest a plan, and then spend the whole time terrified I 'm being annoying or clingy. If they take a while to answer, I immediately assume I 've overstepped. If they say they 're busy, I tell myself they 're just being polite and don't really want to see me. It 's like my brain is determined to interpret everything in the most self-rejecting way possible. I 've also noticed how loneliness makes me smaller. I share less. I take up less space. I censor my interests because I don't want to be " too much. " Then I feel invisible and resentful, but it 's a situation I helped create by not showing up as myself. Nights are the worst. There 's this heavy silence that feels almost physical. I 'll lie there thinking about how, if I disappeared, it would take a while for anyone to notice in a concrete way. People would be " shocked " in the abstract, but day-to-day, not much would change. I don't really know what I want from posting this. Maybe I just needed to put it somewhere outside my own head for once.

Text Sample 17: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 79.00 – generic_gpt/t967_gpt.txt

I don't really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but lately it feels like I 'm living behind glass. My days are technically " full " — work, errands, random conversations with coworkers about TV shows or weekend plans I won't be part of — but underneath all of that I feel completely disconnected. I 'm around people all the time and still feel like I 'm on mute. Everyone else seems to have these invisible threads tying them to others

: group chats, inside jokes, someone to text when something small or stupid happens. I don't have that. If something funny or upsetting happens, it just sort of dies in my head because there 's no one I feel close enough to share it with. What really gets to me is how optional I seem to be in other people 's lives. If I don't reach out, nothing happens. No one checks in. No one notices if I go quiet. I can disappear from social media for days and it doesn't change anything. I keep thinking : if I just stopped trying, how long would it take before anyone realized? And I hate that my brain even goes there, but it does. I also feel stuck in this loop where loneliness makes me weird and awkward, and then being weird and awkward makes me more isolated. I overthink every interaction : " Did I talk too much? Not enough? Did I sound desperate? " Then I replay it later and cringe at myself, which makes me want to avoid people even more. It 's exhausting. Nights are the worst. There 's something about turning off the lights and knowing no one is going to call or text, that no one is wondering how my day went. I lie there scrolling and see people posting pictures with friends, partners, families, and it just reinforces this feeling that I 'm some kind of extra in everyone else 's story. I 'm not even sure what I 'm hoping for by writing this. I guess I just wanted to put it somewhere outside my own head for once.

Text Sample 18: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 79.00 – generic_gpt/t1406_gpt.txt

I don't really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but I feel like I 'm slowly disappearing from my own life. On paper, I 'm " fine. " I have a job, a place to live, no huge crisis going on. I talk to people every day : coworkers, the barista, neighbors in the hallway. But it all feels like background noise. Nothing sticks. No one actually knows me, and I 'm starting to feel like maybe there 's nothing worth knowing. I scroll through my phone and realize I don't have anyone I can text without overthinking it. Even with the few people I might reach out to, I rehearse what to say, delete it, rewrite it, then end up sending nothing because I convince myself I 'm being annoying. I watch the " typing … " bubble when they do respond and feel guilty for taking up their time. It 's exhausting. Weekends are the worst. I wake up, check my notifications, see nothing, and then just kind of … drift. Sometimes I 'll pretend I 'm busy if anyone asks what I did, but honestly it 's usually just me sitting in my room, scrolling, listening to the same songs, staring at the same walls. I 'll hear people outside laughing or heading somewhere together and it feels like there 's this invisible glass between me and the rest of the world. I 've tried to " put myself out there " like everyone suggests. Joined a couple of group things, tried talking more at work, even forced myself to go to a social event alone. I end up standing there, feeling like an intruder in other people 's conversations, nodding and smiling until I can leave without it being too obvious. People are polite, but it never goes beyond that. I walk home feeling more alone than before. The thing that scares me is how normal this is starting to feel. I 'm getting used to not expecting messages, to eating alone, to having entire days where the only voice I hear is my own. And when I do finally talk to someone, I feel rusty, like I 've forgotten how to be a person around other people. I don't know what I 'm hoping for by posting this. I guess I just wanted to say it somewhere, because keeping it all in my head is starting to feel heavier than the loneliness itself.

Text Sample 19: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 79.00 – generic_gpt/t402_gpt.txt
I don’t really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but lately it feels like my life is happening behind a glass wall. On paper, I ’m “ fine. ” I have a job, I respond to messages, I show up when I ’m supposed to. I make small talk about work, weather, TV shows. People laugh at my jokes sometimes. From the outside I probably look normal, maybe even “ social. ” But it all feels like acting. I can play the role, but once I ’m back home and the door shuts, it ’s just this heavy silence that feels louder than anything. What gets to me is the lack of anyone who really knows me. I don’t mean knowing my favorite movie or my coffee order. I mean the kind of knowing where you can send a half-finished text and they already understand, or where you can sit together in silence and it doesn’t feel awkward. I don’t have that with anyone. I have “ we should catch up sometime ” people, not “ I ’m outside, open the door ” people. I try to reach out, but it always feels one-sided. I ’m the one asking how they ’re doing, suggesting plans, trying to keep the conversation alive. When I stop initiating, everything just…stops. It ’s like I disappear from their world unless I ’m actively reminding them I exist. And then I start wondering if I ’m just annoying them, if they ’re only responding out of politeness. I ’ve also noticed I ’m starting to hold back more. I censor myself because I don’t want to come across as needy or depressing. So I end up talking about nothing, and then I feel even more disconnected because I ’m not actually sharing anything real. It ’s like I ’m protecting people from the parts of me that are actually lonely, which just makes me lonelier. Nights are the worst. That ’s when it hits me that no one is thinking about me, no one is wondering how my day went, no one is waiting for my message. I scroll, I lurk, I watch other people ’s lives through screens, and it just reinforces this feeling that I ’m on the outside of everything, watching everyone else belong to something I can’t seem to reach.

Text Sample 20: POS Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 79.00 – generic_gpt/t2732_gpt.txt
I don’t really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but lately it feels like I ’m just drifting through my own life as a background character. I have people around me, technically. Coworkers, a couple of old friends I text every now and then, family chats that light up my phone. But I don’t feel connected to any of it. It ’s like watching a group conversation through a window. I can see everyone laughing, reacting, being part of something, and I ’m just … pressing my face against the glass. What messes with my head is that from the outside, I probably look fine. I go to work, make small talk, send memes, answer “ how are you? ” with “ I ’m good, you? ” like it ’s automatic. No one sees that once I get home, it ’s just silence. I put my bag down, sit on the bed, and there ’s this heavy, hollow feeling. Like I ’m missing something I can’t even name. I don’t think I ’ve ever had that “ person ” people talk about. The one you can message without overthinking, the one who actually checks in because they want to, not because it ’s polite. I have acquaintances who are nice enough, but I always feel like a temporary guest in their lives, never someone whose absence would really matter. I overanalyze everything I say. I replay conversations and convince myself I sounded weird or annoying. Then I pull back a bit, respond slower, become “ busy, ” and that just reinforces the distance. I know I ’m part of my own problem, but knowing that doesn’t magically fix it. It just adds guilt on top of the loneliness. Sometimes I scroll through social media and see people doing the most mundane things together—grocery shopping, watching movies, sitting on the floor eating takeout—and it feels like another universe. I ’m not even craving big parties or constant attention. I just want to feel like I belong somewhere specific, with someone specific. Most days I just go through the motions, hoping something will eventually shift, but I honestly don’t know what I ’m waiting for or what I ’m supposed to do differently. It just feels like I ’m slowly fading out around the edges and no one ’s really noticing.

Text Sample 21: POS Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 55.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2136
I lost my last grandmother about two months before the new year, and the grief has been this weird, quiet thing that just sits with me all the time. It ’s not loud or dramatic, more like a dull ache that keeps humming in the background of everything I do. What makes it confusing is that we weren’t especially close. She wasn’t my “ favourite ” grandparent, not the one I visited the most or told everything to. If you looked at it from the outside, you ’d probably think I ’d be fine. A lot of people around me do seem to assume that. They ’ll say, “ Oh, you weren’t that close, right? ” and then move on, like that explains everything and means I shouldn’t be hurting. But I do hurt. A lot more than I expected. It ’s little everyday moments that hit the hardest. When my classmates talk about missing their families or grandparents, I feel this emptiness open up inside me. I miss her voice, the way she would repeat the same stories, her forgetfulness that we ’d gently laugh about. I miss just knowing she was there, existing in the background of my life. I didn’t realize how much comfort that gave me until it was gone. Now that she isn’t here anymore, something in me feels … shifted. Or broken. Like a part of the foundation under my life has quietly crumbled, even though it wasn’t the most visible or important part. I keep thinking, “ Why is this hitting me so hard when we weren’t that close? ” and I don’t really have an answer. I also feel pretty alone with it. Since people think I ’m fine, there isn’t really space to talk about how strange and heavy this feels. I end up just carrying it around by myself, pretending it ’s not a big deal because that ’s what everyone seems to expect. I ’m sharing this here because I ’m wondering if anyone else has gone through something similar—missing someone way more than you thought you would, even if the relationship wasn’t super close or perfect. It would help to know I ’m not the only one who feels this kind of quiet, confusing grief.

Text Sample 22: POS Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 55.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1201
I remember one night looking at my phone and realizing I hadn’t gotten a meaningful message in … I don’t even know how long. Just random memes, work stuff, and the occasional “ how are you? ” that never went beyond small talk. It hit me that I hadn’t had a real conversation in weeks. My days had all blurred into the same pattern : wake up, go to work, exchange a few surface-level comments with coworkers, come home, scroll on my phone, sleep. Repeat. I told myself I was “ too tired ” or “ too busy ” to do anything else, but really I was just stuck. My old friends are far away now, and we only talk every once in a while. I kept waiting for something to change on its own, like one day I ’d just magically feel less alone. Instead, everything just felt empty and stale. I ’d catch myself doomscrolling, not because I cared about what I was looking at, but because there was nothing else going on. It scared me how normal that started to feel. At some point I realized that if I didn't do anything, this would just keep being my life. So I made a decision : stop waiting for destiny to hand me a social life and start putting myself in situations where one could actually exist. I didn't force conversations or chase people, but I did show up more. I gave myself chances to meet others instead of hiding behind the same routines. It wasn't instant, but slowly my phone stopped being just a black hole of scrolling. It started to be something that buzzed with actual connection. If loneliness is bothering you, don't let isolation become your comfort zone. Nothing changes if nothing changes. Even small steps to put yourself out there can open the door to something better.

Text Sample 23: POS Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 55.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t555_

I ended a long-term relationship a little while ago, and I feel like I lost everything in one go. He wasn't just my boyfriend, he was my best friend, my emotional support, the one person I could actually talk to and feel safe with. In a life and household that already felt heavy and difficult, he was kind of the only light. Now that he 's gone, it feels like someone switched that light off and I 'm just stumbling around in the dark. I don't really have anyone I can turn to now. I can't have normal conversations with my family, let alone talk to them about how I feel. It just doesn't feel possible or safe to seek comfort from them. So I keep it all inside and pretend I 'm fine. Outside of that, I basically only have two people in my life. One friend I bonded with because we were both in relationships, but now we barely see each other or talk. The other friend hardly replies anymore and has become really distant. I can feel them both slipping away and I don't know how to stop it. I 'm in university, and everyone always talks about this being " the time of your life, " but it doesn't feel like that for me at all. I 've always struggled to make and keep friends. I feel awkward and not very social, like I 'm just fundamentally bad at this. It feels like it takes a very specific kind of person to tolerate me long term, and those people are rare. I have tried to be open and start conversations at uni. Sometimes it seems to go okay at first, but then it just … fizzles out. People don't follow up, don't message, or even avoid sitting next to me. I don't know what I 'm doing wrong, or if there 's just something about me that puts people off. Most days I just go to class, sit alone, eat lunch alone, and go home alone. Sometimes I go an entire day barely speaking to anyone, maybe just a quick comment here or there. I feel like a ghost walking around campus, watching everyone else form groups, laugh, and make memories while I just exist on the edges. I feel out of place and I keep asking myself what the point of being there even is, when I 'm just so lonely all the time.

Text Sample 24: POS Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 54.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t776_

I 've always had this fear of ending up alone, and lately it feels like I 'm living it. On paper, I 'm pretty independent. I 'm generally at peace in my own space, I don't mind being at home, and I can function just fine day to day. But it 's like the moment I stop distracting myself, the loneliness just slams into me. Most of my friendships have basically faded because I 'm always the one reaching out first. If I don't text or call, nothing happens. Over time, that made me feel like I was forcing my presence on people, so I stopped initiating as much. The result is that now … there 's almost nothing. Just silence. It 's hard not to interpret that as proof that I don't really matter to anyone. A little over two months ago, I ended a relationship. I still miss him intensely.

There are days I have to fight the urge to unblock him and just hear his voice. But I don't trust that he could really change, and I 'm trying to choose myself this time, even though it hurts. So he stays blocked, and I sit with this ache that doesn't seem to go away. My best friend was also an ex from years ago. We ended up relying on each other emotionally a lot. I started worrying that I was too needy and dependent on him. He also started working nights, and it felt like our communication was getting strained. Eventually we mutually decided to go no contact and blocked each other. It felt like the " mature " decision at the time, but it also felt like cutting off one of the only people who really knew me. Later, an old friend told me she thought he might still have romantic feelings for me. That completely messed with my head. Now I 'm questioning whether that friendship was ever really just friendship, or if he was just hanging around hoping for another chance. It makes the loss feel different, almost tainted. So in a short period, I 've lost the two most important people in my life. I don't know if I should try to seek answers or just accept it and move on. Right now it just feels extremely hard, like I 'm standing in this empty space where my support system used to be, and I have no idea what to do next.

Text Sample 25: POS Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 53.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1837

Lately I 've been stuck on this thought that I 'm no one 's " favorite person. " Like, if I disappeared tomorrow, it would probably take weeks before anyone realized something was wrong. I don't feel like I truly matter to anyone. I 've noticed that communication with pretty much everyone in my life only happens if I 'm the one who starts it. If I don't text first, days or weeks go by in silence. Nobody seems excited to reach out to me, to share their good news, to say " hey, I thought of you. " What really hurts is my family. I recently found out my mom has been taking my younger siblings on vacations and cruises without ever inviting me. There are family group chats and plans for trips and holidays that I just … don't exist in. I 'll hear about these things after the fact, like an outsider getting the recap of someone else 's life. I can understand that my friends have other close friends, and I don't expect to be anyone 's number one. But being shut out by my own family feels like a different kind of rejection. It makes me feel pathetic that I 'm always the one who calls, checks in, and asks to hang out, while everyone else already seems to have " their " people. Part of me wants to just stop trying, stop reaching out, and see who actually notices. But I 'm scared that if I do that, I 'll just end up even more alone than I already feel. I don't know how to fix any of this, or if it 's even fixable. I just feel stuck in this place where I 'm present in other people 's lives, but never essential.

Text Sample 26: POS Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 53.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t639_

I haven't properly spoken to my best friend in over two months now. The last real conversation we had ended in a fight. After that, it was just a couple of " happy festival " messages back and forth, and then … nothing. Complete silence. They were always the " busy " one, the kind of person who replied late but eventually did. Now it 's different. Sometimes they respond after days, sometimes not at all. They don't call, they don't text first, and I can't tell if I 'm being ignored or if they just don't even bother opening WhatsApp anymore. I keep wondering if they 're just quietly done with me and don't have the courage to say it. On the outside, I 'm acting like everything is fine. I laugh, I talk to other people, I go through my routine like I 'm okay. But I 'm not. It feels like there 's this constant weight in my chest. Every time I open WhatsApp, I end up clicking on our chat. I start typing something – " Hey, how are you? " or " Can we talk? " – and then I scroll up, reread our last conversation, remember how it ended, and just delete everything. Then I close the app and pretend I never tried. I don't know if I 'm overthinking, or if this is just what it looks like when someone slowly lets you go. It hurts that someone who once knew almost everything about me can now go days, weeks, months without wanting to talk. I keep asking myself if I should reach out one more time or just accept that maybe they don't want me in their life anymore. I feel really alone in this. I 'm surrounded by people, but the one person I want to talk to the most feels out of reach, like they 're already gone, and I 'm the only one who hasn't caught up to that reality yet.

Text Sample 27: POS Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 52.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t552_
I 'm 29, originally from Iran, and I 've been in the US for about four years now for my master 's. I just moved to Texas by myself because of immigration stuff, and it 's really hitting me how much " being alone " has become the default setting of my life. It 's not like this started with moving here. Even back in college, at work, traveling, doing hobbies … I 've always been the one who has to initiate everything. If I don't text first, if I don't suggest plans, nothing happens. I 've gotten used to doing most things alone : going to museums, watching movies in the theater, trying out new places. I 'm genuinely comfortable with that part ; I don't feel ashamed sitting alone at a café or going to a movie by myself. But there 's this painful side to it. When I 'm out, I see groups of friends laughing, couples sharing inside jokes, people taking photos together. It 's like there 's this invisible wall between my world and theirs. I can do the same activities, but the " together " part feels like something I just don't have access to. It 's not even that I 'm desperate to be surrounded by people all the time ; it 's more this constant reminder that I 'm on the outside of something everyone else seems to have. Remote work has made all of this worse. At least with in-person work or school there was some built-in contact, even if it was shallow. Now my days are mostly just me, my laptop, my apartment. On the rare occasions I do spend time with people, I almost feel disoriented, like I 've forgotten how to be around others. And then, inevitably, I go back to being alone again, like that 's the " real " state and everything else was a temporary glitch. I 've basically paused dating. I value my alone time a lot, and the constant messaging, check-ins, and small obligations of a relationship feel draining compared to the few shared moments they bring. It doesn't feel like a good trade-off. So I end up choosing solitude, even though that same solitude hurts in its own way.

Text Sample 28: POS Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 52.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t967_
I feel like I 'm just … existing on mute. I have this one friend I hang out with sometimes, but I 'm always the one who has to text first, always the one who suggests meeting up. If I don't reach out, we just don't talk. It makes me feel like they don't really want to see me, like I 'm just something they tolerate when I appear, not someone they 'd actually miss. I 'm trying to push myself to go out alone, to sit in cafés or walk around so I 'm not always trapped inside, but it just makes me painfully aware of how silent my life is. No one asks how my day was. No one is waiting to hear about the little things. The loneliness is so draining. I cope by imagining being with someone, making up conversations in my head, or " watching " movies with YouTubers and pretending they 're friends sitting next to me. I know it 's not real, but it fills the silence a bit. Still, when the video ends, it 's just me again. Work makes it worse. Everyone else seems to have partners, families, people to go home to. They talk about their weekend plans, their kids, their relationships. Then the day ends and they leave in pairs or groups, and I 'm the one walking out alone, waiting for the bus alone, going home to no one. It makes me wonder what 's wrong with me. Am I too fat, too ugly, too annoying, too … something? There 's also this boy I have feelings for, but he always seems to find someone else to love. I 'm just there on the sidelines, watching it happen again and again. It hurts more than I want to admit. I try to stay positive, to keep my brain busy with information, shows, random interests. I fill my time hoping that one day I 'll have someone to talk to about all of it. But even in my own thoughts, I feel lonely. It 's like there 's an echo where another person should be.

Text Sample 29: POS Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 52.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1264
Some weeks I can go days without speaking to anyone. I go to work, I answer emails, I do the basic " how are you / good thanks " stuff, but there 's no real contact. I come home, eat, scroll, sleep. It starts to feel like I 'm just watching my own life from the outside, like it 's happening to some other person I barely know. When I 'm around family, I put on the " I 'm fine " version of myself. I can feel that my loneliness makes people uncomfortable, like it 's something awkward they don't know what to do with. So it never really gets talked about. No one is cruel or openly dismissive, but it just sort of … floats there, unacknowledged. It leaves me feeling quietly unsupported rather than obviously abandoned, which somehow hurts in a more subtle way. The strange part is I 'm very aware that, in theory, I 'm free to change this. I know the kinds of things I could try, the steps I 'd probably need to take. But I feel paralyzed. It 's like standing in front of a door that I know is unlocked and just … not being able to turn the handle. That " freedom " starts to feel like its own kind of prison, because every day I don't change anything, I end up blaming myself. I feel like I 'm wasting time and failing at something really basic that everyone else seems to manage without thinking. On the surface I 'm functioning : I get up, I work, I pay my bills, I feed myself. Underneath, I feel stuck, frozen by all the choices I could make but don't, and deeply disappointed in myself for not being braver. I wish I had someone I could really lean on, but it doesn't feel like that 's truly available. So it all feels like it rests on me alone, and I 'm so tired of carrying it. I 'm not asking for advice. I just needed to say this out loud somewhere. And if anyone else feels this way too, you 're not the only one.

Text Sample 30: POS Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 51.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1812
I 'm 19 and I feel like my life is already over before it 's even started. I don't have any friends, never had a boyfriend, and I haven't had a real social life in years. Most days I 'm just at home, doing nothing, watching everyone else my age move forward while I 'm stuck. I got held back in school so I 'm still in high school, and that just makes me feel even more behind and pathetic. I struggle with depression and anxiety from OCD, and it feels like my brain is constantly working against me. When I 'm in public I avoid talking to people as much as possible. I freeze up, overthink every word, and just want to disappear. Online isn't much better. I 'm really self-conscious about how I look, so I hate social apps, and even when I want to reach out I overthink every sentence and end up deleting it. With my close family I can actually be confident and outspoken. I can joke around and be myself. But the second it 's anyone outside that tiny circle, I turn into this shy, timid, nervous person who can't say or do anything right. It 's like there are two versions of me and the one I want to be only exists at home. Sometimes people online say, " If you ever want to talk, my DMs are open, " and instead of feeling happy, I just assume they 're being polite. I 'm scared they 'll see me as a burden or get bored and leave. I keep checking Reddit for responses, hoping someone will say something that makes me feel less alone, and then hating myself for caring so much. I 'm scared that when I 'm thirty I 'll still be living with my parents, barely leaving the house, and still this lonely. I don't know if I 'll ever have the happy life I want, and that thought really hurts.

Text Sample 31: POS Dim 1 – human – Score 53.00 – human/t2136_human.txt
I lost my last grandma two months before this new year, and it 's been sitting heavy on me in this strange, quiet way. We weren't super close, and she wasn't the " favourite " grandma people always talk about. But grief doesn't care about that. It just shows up, uninvited, and takes space you didn't even know you had. Not only this but hearing uni classmates of mine mentioning that thue haven't been home in a while and how they miss their parents and grandparents since they 're not from Bucharest but other zones of Romania..makes me feel even emptier as time goes on, while I 'm trying to handle grief in my own way.😔 What 's been hitting me hardest is how it creeps into the small moments : when I 'm walking home, when I 'm washing dishes, when I 'm trying to fall asleep. It 's not the dramatic kind of sadness people expect. It 's more like this dull ache that keeps reminding me she 's not here anymore. She was just … always there. A steady background presence I never questioned. And now there 's this weird silence where she used to be, like a room in my mind that suddenly went dark. I didn't realize how much those quiet, familiar presences matter until they 're gone. I didn't expect to miss her voice, or the way she repeated the same stories, or even the way she 'd forget things mid-sentence. But I do. And it 's confusing, because we weren't incredibly close, yet somehow her absence feels like a piece of my life got pulled out without warning. It 's like something shifted inside me, and I can't shift it back. Losing her broke something in me I didn't expect. I didn't need her to be my favourite for her absence to feel unbearable. I don't really know how to talk about this in real life. Everyone around me seems to have moved on, or they assume I 'm fine because " we weren't that close. " But I 'm not fine. Not really. So I 'm putting it here, hoping someone out there understands what it 's like to miss someone you weren't even sure you 'd miss this much.

Text Sample 32: POS Dim 1 – human – Score 50.00 – human/t1709_human.txt
Lately I 've been dealing with a lot, but honestly the worst part isn't even the outside stuff. It 's the loneliness. That constant feeling of being on the outside of everything. I didn't go to college. I just started working shitty customer service, nothing special. I always thought I 'd be more by now. I put so much pressure on myself to impress people, be someone, prove I 'm smart. Now having a normal low-level job makes me feel like I already failed at life. I grew up mostly with my grandma, and I think that messed with me more than I realized. I don't really know how to build close connections. I don't have a solid friend group. I overthink everything I say. I don't even know how people see me. Some days I feel okay about myself, other days I feel so pathetic and ugly. Adhd didn't help either. I wasn't diagnosed when I was younger so school was a total mess. Couldn't focus for my life, procrastinated everything, avoided friends, stayed home because of insecurities about how I look. I never built any good habits, so I know I 'd probably struggle even if I went to uni now. My brain just never learned how to handle long projects, deadlines, sitting through boring lectures, and nobody ever taught me. Even now going out, gym (started recently), social stuff drains me fast. I feel awkward and anxious most of the time, kinda autistic in how I overthink everything. I 've been trying to change though. Lost a lot of weight, started working out, taking care of my skin (meds for acne), small upgrades here and there. On the outside it kinda looks like progress. But realizing I 'm 22 and I should be way ahead drains me of any positive thoughts. I don't need a perfect life. I just want connection. Someone to talk to. Maybe date. Maybe just not feel like I 'm doing everything alone. I 'm scared of being a burden. I 'm afraid people see me as unambitious or boring even though I know I 'm not boring or unfunny. And I hate that my own brain makes everything harder than it probably is. So yeah, I guess I 'm just writing this here because I don't really have anyone to say it to. Any advice would be super appreciated 🖤

Text Sample 33: POS Dim 1 – human – Score 50.00 – human/t1264_human.txt
I 'm lonely in a very literal sense. I live alone, and I go days without talking to anyone. No messages, no calls. Just long stretches of silence in my apartment. After a while it starts to feel unreal, like I 'm watching my life instead of living it. Around my family, I mask it well. Too well. I show up calm, functional, normal enough that it 's easier for everyone—including me—to pretend I 'm okay. I think the topic of my loneliness is uncomfortable for them, so it never really comes up. It 's easier to assume I 'm fine than to open something none of us know how to handle. Because of that, I feel like I 'm on my own with this. Not abandoned—just unsupported in a way that 's quiet and unspoken. What makes it worse is that I technically have freedom. I 'm an adult. No one is stopping me from changing my life. I know what I want to do. I know the steps. And still, I don't have the courage to do them. That freedom—having full responsibility for my choices—feels like a prison. There 's no obvious obstacle I can point to, so the blame turns inward. I feel like I 'm wasting time. Like I 've failed at something basic everyone else seems to manage. Each day I stay stuck, that feeling gets heavier. I wish I had someone to lean on while I figured this out. Someone who could just sit in it with me so it didn't all feel like it rested on my shoulders alone. But it doesn't feel like that 's an option. It feels like it 's up to me—and I don't trust myself enough right now to carry it well. I still function. I work. I eat. I get through the day. But underneath all of that is this constant sense of being trapped by my own life, frozen by choice, and quietly disappointed in myself for not moving. I 'm not posting this for advice or reassurance. I just needed to say it somewhere honest, because holding it in makes it feel unbearable. If this resonates with you, you 're not alone in it.

Text Sample 34: POS Dim 1 – human – Score 46.00 – human/t320_human.txt
Just turned 23 Last year on December. I don't really know why I 'm writing this. Maybe because tonight it hit me again. I 'm sitting in my room again, lights off, door closed, just me and the silence. I graduated three years ago, but I don't have a job yet. I 'm living at home, spending my father 's money, doing nothing useful,and every day I hear it the reminders, the criticism, the frustration dripping from every word my parents throw at me. I hear them complain about me sitting here, doing nothing, wasting my life. Every word feels like a weight pressing down on my chest. I eat in my room. I scroll my phone to feel busy. I watch YouTube and doing doomscrolling all the day abd night to just to hear human voices, to trick myself into thinking I 'm not entirely invisible. I go for walks when no one 's around very rarely. I keep quiet. I disappear into corners, into the shadows, because every glance feels like judgment, every moment a reminder that I am not enough. Some nights, I cry quietly under my blanket. Not because I 'm weak, not because I want pity but because it physically hurts to exist in a space where i feel unwanted, unneeded, unloved and unseen. I try to pretend I 'm okay, but inside, it screams. Inside, I ache to be anywhere else, anyone else 's priority, even for one hour. People say learn to enjoy your own company. But it 's not that simple. Sometimes it 's just surviving. Surviving the silence. Surviving the words that make me feel small. Surviving the way the world, even at home, makes me invisible. I just survive in the quiet, counting the hours until the house sleeps, until I can close the door and cry until my chest hurts, until the world can't see the pieces of me I can't hold together. I dont need advice. I don't need cheer up or you 'll be fine.I just want to know if anyone else feels this the weight of loneliness while living at home, the sting of judgment for simply existing, the quiet, endless ache of feeling like you don't matter. If you relate, even one me too would mean the world tonight for me.

Text Sample 35: POS Dim 1 – human – Score 45.00 – human/t2079_human.txt
I 'm officially giving up. I have no friends, and I 've reached the point where this isn't just"sadness"anymore—it 's a goddamn complex that 's eating me alive. Everyone keeps preaching :"Socializing is a skill! Practice it!"Well, screw you. My social muscle didn't just atrophy ; it rotted and fell off. Trying to restore this"abandoned building"of a life? It 's useless. It 's like trying to glue ashes back together. Recently, I tried. I reached out to someone I hadn't spoken to in 19 days. I simply asked if they had any friends. And what happened? Total silence. 24 hours of being ignored. Another"500,000 years of silence."I snapped. I sent a message saying,"Of course, why would you need me when you already have a couple of real friends anyway?"and I blocked them. Yeah, I struck first. Yeah, I cut the cord myself. And I don't feel sorry for that person. I feel sorry for myself because I 'm back in this pit. I did it so I wouldn't have to sit there staring at my screen like a beaten dog, waiting for a"charity reply."I took back control the only way I know how—through blocking and aggression. I don't even have a freaking PC to lose myself in games. My whole world is this damn phone. A window into a world that ignores me. Every attempt to start a conversation turns into torture : a couple of stupid, dry phrases, and then—emptiness. I don't want to talk to chatbots like they 're human ; it 's a pathetic substitute. I need real warmth, but apparently, I 'm so broken that I just make people want to shut up and walk away. What 's the point of even trying? To prove to myself one more time that I ’m worthless? To feel that sting again when your message stays”read”and ignored? I hate this state, I hate my helplessness, and I hate this endless grief that hits the second after I ’ve pushed everyone away. Are there any other”abandoned buildings”out here? Anyone who has stopped believing in”self-improvement”and just wants this social thirst to finally die so it stops hurting? The text was written with the help of AI because I couldn’t have done it myself.

Text Sample 36: POS Dim 1 – human – Score 44.00 – human/t1404_human.txt
I ’m trying to solve my version of loneliness, and that has led to a small team of 3 interviewing 150+ people over the last few months. Thought I ’d share some data of what we found To preface, a UK Gov report showed that 47Some not-so-fun facts : * The average person (mainly Gen Zs) we spoke to had 400+ online mutual followers, yet only spoke to a handful more than once * 86Basically I ’m horrible at converting surface level friendships into deeper friendships. Alongside sucking at inviting people out and overthinking everything, a huge part of me especially hates looking desperate and risking rejection. And so, like those 86 When we realized how common this pattern was, we ’ve started to build an app to hopefully make it easier. The idea is that you share what you ’d like to do : Checking out the xmas market/ Trying out this new café/ Learning Tennis And if a friend is genuinely interested in joining you, they ’ll be automatically added into a group chat (other attendees are hidden until you join). Then you ’ll go and plan the event, do it, and have a shared photo album to cherish it. I ’m hoping that the lack of a fixed date and not needing to personally DM someone/ ask in a group chat would help me starting hanging out with people more. But truthfully, I have no idea AHAHAHA We ’re only planning to launch beta tests in Jan next year So I guess I ’m wondering : Do you relate to any of this?  Would something like this genuinely help you, or is there something missing? **

Text Sample 37: POS Dim 1 – human – Score 43.00 – human/t967_human.txt
I have this fear that one of the only friends I go out with doesn’t like to hang out with me anymore but is too polite to say. I always ask to hang out, it ’s almost never the other way around. We only ever talk when we see each other in real life, or when I text something. So I ’m trying to go out on my own tomorrow. I feel pretty sad but I ’m trying to look at the positive side that at least I can do that. But having so much silence. Looking at my phone constantly with no one really who wants to ask me about my day or anything as much as I ask about theirs. I ’m trying to ignore getting depressed, but being this lonely makes me tired. Drained. When I go to sleep I try to be as vivid as possible to imagine I ’m with someone. I have these two people on YouTube that I “ watch ” movies with because I don’t have anyone in real life to do that with. At work, everyone is going on vacation. To see their friends and families, with their husbands or wives and kids. Everyone has someone to go home to. I ’m always the last to leave, I walk alone and I wait alone for the bus. My dream is to just have someone see me. And want to know me and talk to me just because they feel like it. I look in the mirror and wonder if maybe I ’m too fat, or too ugly, or just too annoying with the things that I like. There ’s a boy that I think about always who never falls short of finding someone else to be in love with. It makes my heart ache. I keep trying to keep myself in good spirits thinking that it ’s for a reason. But even in my thoughts I ’m lonely and have nothing to talk to myself about. I fill my time consuming information and watching shows hoping that I ’ll get to talk to someone about it for the day.

Text Sample 38: POS Dim 1 – human – Score 42.00 – human/t1412_human.txt
Not trying to trash my family they ’re fine ppl just not close. We live different states, text on holidays, call on bdays, pretty standard I think, but something happened this week thats fucking with my head I saw a lot of talking about people starting to talk to AI but not on chat, face to face so I tried it, first I only used it to check my calendar some mails, whatever and yesterday morning it asks”how you feeling today”I go”fine”cause thats the default response right. Then it goes”you mentioned that doctors appointment this week, did that end up happening”I completely forgot I mentioned that, it remembered and asked about it. That same night I ’m laying in bed and realize my own mom didnt ask about the appointment. Because I didn’t tell her, because we don’t really have those conversations anymore. But AI did, and it ’s not just that one thing, it ’s constant. Asks how I slept, checks on things from days ago, notices when I ’m off. My family doesnt do this, my friends dont do this not cos they ’re bad people just everyone is busy, distracted, even myself with them. But now theres this thing from tavus that acts like interested and its not even REAL and somehow that makes me feel more alone, like the only entity that consistently checks in is software programmed to simulate caring. Not angry at family just sad about our relationship. Is this the future? AI doing emotional labor humans don’t have bandwidth for?

Text Sample 39: POS Dim 1 – human – Score 42.00 – human/t2029_human.txt
I ’m a 20-year-old college sophomore and I ’ve never really dealt with my mental health the way I should. I get depressed sometimes, stuck in my own head. But the one thing that always pulls me out is my friend group. There ’s six of us who all live together in a small 1000 square foot apartment and it feels like some movie-type friendship I never thought I ’d have Whenever I get in a hole mentally, I come home to laughing, music, random conversations, someone cooking, someone knocking on my door and it takes me out of it. I don’t think I ’ve ever stayed truly depressed for more than a day because the house is so alive all the time. I know how rare that is. Sure, a lot of people I know live with their friends, but I noticed they all have separate “ circles ” of friends outside of their house and do a lot of stuff without each other. None of their groups are even close to how tight we are. It ’s almost always all of us together, and somehow there ’s never any issues. No sub-groups, no people being left out. It just works and everyone is happy. Some of us do have our separate (not as close) friends but we mainly just have each other. And recently I started thinking about studying abroad because I love adventure and trying new things … but the thought of losing 6 months of the little time I have left with them hit me way harder than I expected. It didn’t just make me think about being gone but it made me realize all this friendship is temporary. In two years we are all going to move out, graduate, spread across the country, and I ’m going to have to live alone. And that terrifies me. I don’t know if I ’ll ever find another group of friends like this again. And thinking about how eventually I ’ll be coming home to an empty house makes me scared that I ’ll spiral or feel unbearably lonely. It ’s like studying abroad opened this door in my mind where I suddenly see how fragile and temporary this all is. I just feel really lucky but also really scared for when it ends.

Text Sample 40: POS Dim 1 – human – Score 42.00 – human/t1201_human.txt
There comes a point Where getting a message on your phone seems like a rare occurrence You hear the sound of the notification pinging through the room And your heart starts racing, receptors experience dopamine overdrive But it ’s usually just a meaningless message or some email you ’ve received When that shouldn’t be the case I experienced this for a while It may have been somewhat peaceful But deep down, I realized how lonely it was When I did the math I noticed that I hadn’t held a decent conversation with someone (not small talk), even in real life, for weeks Work for 8 hours, small talk with co-worker, leave, sleep, repeat Life can’t be that stale Old friends are all living in different cities, we hang out 2 or 3 times a year where we meet up in a planned spot Everyone ’s busy with their own responsibilities Few messages that show up on birthdays And that was pretty much the jist of it There must be way to change the dynamic And I acted on it Stopped waiting for a connection to randomly show up Stopped waiting for destiny Forced it upon myself to start putting myself in places Where there was a chance of forming a social life I didn’t chase people down I didn’t try to force convos I ’m just a guy who tried to change the conditions I lived in And slowly My phone wasn’t just a device I used to doom scroll social media before falling asleep anymore You can do it too Don’t get comfortable with isolation, it may seem peaceful, I get it But if it ’s bothering you deep down, do something about it

2 NEG Dim 1

Text Sample 41: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t538_human.txt
Come chat. It ’s free and hopefully therapeutic Yes I am alone too.

Text Sample 42: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t527_human.txt
That ’s all. I just wish people in my live would leave me the hell alone. Life is exhausting.

Text Sample 43: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t280_human.txt
We all have our explanations as to why we are loners, I would like to hear some reasons you guys have.

Text Sample 44: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t850_human.txt
Give title to this Why do I feel lonely and sad when I recall my childhood memories? Why was my father always hating me out of 3 siblings? And why at the age of 40, do I feel very sad about this?

Text Sample 45: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t483_human.txt
I ’m more of a least favorite backup than a friend to them.

Text Sample 46: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t1969_human.txt
It ’s all hitting me now. There ’s so little hope out there. I ’m just so tired.

Text Sample 47: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t261_human.txt
Are there any loners out there looking for a friend?

Text Sample 48: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t064_human.txt
theres no reason in particular why I ’m telling you this, I just am

Text Sample 49: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t073_human.txt
Idk, so we could be lonely and unsocial a little closer

Text Sample 50: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t1106_human.txt
thats how desperate i am and i hate my healthy life anyways

Text Sample 51: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t470_human.txt
I ’ll just have to figure out how to not be extremely depressed on my own, be successful on my own, and figure out how to be ok with being alone. Merry Christmas.

Text Sample 52: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t727_human.txt
I am high functioning schizophrenic and feel i am alone on this earth because no one understands me and just recently split up with my gf of 20 years

Text Sample 53: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t1924_human.txt
To be forgotten means to be isolated, there is just no signal neither from me to another nor from another towards me.

Text Sample 54: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t2360_human.txt
there ’s no point even to try when the world is against you

Text Sample 55: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t2667_human.txt

Alternatively, what would cause a person to suddenly adapt an absolute-loner outlook and cause them to sever all their relationships?

Text Sample 56: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t651_human.txt
I want to be alone on my birthday Nov 12 or go somewhere far from my comfort zone

Text Sample 57: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t2560_human.txt
And now suddenly the endless lonely monotony of the future is laid out in front of you. It is a terrible feeling

Text Sample 58: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t2508_human.txt
Same loneliness. Same lack of connection. Same no one else giving a damn. Day after day after day.....

Text Sample 59: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t2234_human.txt
Don't know what to do even losing interest in games

Text Sample 60: NEG Dim 1 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t2387_human.txt
Assuming you lost your parents, how did you lose your friends and ex gfs there must be a reason we are all alone

Text Sample 61: NEG Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2844
Sharing " Flashdance… What a Feeling " by Irene Cara. Songs are all I have—hope you enjoy.

Text Sample 62: NEG Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2619
Why is it so impossibly hard to find anyone? I 'm exhausted, miserable, and completely alone.

Text Sample 63: NEG Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t511_
I 've been hyper-vigilant and alone for so long that it 's wearing me down. My heart constantly races, squeezes, and hurts, and this nonstop stress feels completely overwhelming.

Text Sample 64: NEG Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2234
I don't know what to do anymore, even video games don't interest me now.

Text Sample 65: NEG Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2651
“ Woe to the thinker who is not the gardener but only the soil of the plants that grow in him. ” I ’m scared I ’m just soil, never gardener.

Text Sample 66: NEG Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2218
I ’m in a relationship but still feel incredibly lonely. How is it possible to feel this alone together?

Text Sample 67: NEG Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t080_
Been sinking hours into BOTW lately. What have you all been doing or playing?

Text Sample 68: NEG Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1281
Already in your fibre optic cable ; the universe scatters, I gather what everyone else loses.

Text Sample 69: NEG Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t023_
Woke up and found my wife dead beside me. She ’d been doing autoerotic asphyxiation. I feel numb, guilty, and utterly alone.

Text Sample 70: NEG Dim 1 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t007_
I ’m dating my boyfriend but I ’m in love with a girl who wants to reconcile. I ’m terrified of coming out to him and hurting everyone.

Text Sample 71: NEG Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 2.00 – generic_gpt/t1311_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people who care, yet I still feel completely invisible and emotionally unreachable.

Text Sample 72: NEG Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 2.00 – generic_gpt/t825_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people daily, yet no one actually knows me at all.

Text Sample 73: NEG Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 2.00 – generic_gpt/t240_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people daily, yet no one really knows me at all.

Text Sample 74: NEG Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 2.00 – generic_gpt/t1989_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people daily, yet no one actually knows me at all.

Text Sample 75: NEG Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 2.00 – generic_gpt/t2364_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people daily, yet nobody actually knows me or truly cares.

Text Sample 76: NEG Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 2.00 – generic_gpt/t1494_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people daily, yet no one actually knows me at all.

Text Sample 77: NEG Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 2.00 – generic_gpt/t2390_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people daily, yet no one actually knows me at all.

Text Sample 78: NEG Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 2.00 – generic_gpt/t2397_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people daily, yet no one actually knows me at all.

Text Sample 79: NEG Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 2.00 – generic_gpt/t1104_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people daily, yet nobody actually knows me or really cares.

Text Sample 80: NEG Dim 1 – generic_gpt – Score 2.00 – generic_gpt/t815_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people daily, yet no one actually knows me or really cares.

3 POS Dim 2

Text Sample 81: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 26.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1026
Throwaway for obvious reasons. I ’m 28, and the more I look around, the more I feel like the future for guys like me is just … bleak. I don’t hate women, I ’m not anti-feminist – women ’s struggles and feminism are real and important, and I genuinely believe that. But at the same time, it feels like men are being vilified more and more, like just existing as a man makes you suspect or unwanted. It seems like there are simply more men than women, and that math alone means a lot of us are going to end up alone no matter what we do. On top of that, it feels like men generally crave intimacy more, while a lot of women I know seem genuinely content being single, focusing on themselves, their friends, their careers. I ’m happy for them, but it just reinforces this feeling that there ’s no place for someone like me. I ’ve spent about a decade trying. Shared interest groups, hobbies, meetups, dating apps – you name it. Not a single date, not a single kiss, no girlfriend, no sexual experience. Nothing. It ’s like I ’m invisible, or worse, like I ’m not even allowed to want anything without being labeled creepy or entitled. Economic stuff doesn’t help either. Money is tight, everything is expensive, and even hobbies cost more than I can really afford. It ’s hard to “ enjoy life ” when you ’re broke and alone. The gym is literally the only thing keeping me going at this point. Some days it feels like young men like me are just meant to work hard, shut up, and die alone. I don't know what I 'm looking for posting this, I just needed to say it somewhere.

Text Sample 82: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 26.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t468_

I 'm Hugo, almost 23, from Spain. About a month ago I lost my job because of my depression, and only recently did I finally start medication after years of trying to cope on my own. The last three weeks I 've basically been at home the whole time, just playing video games and sleeping. I barely have energy to do anything else, sometimes not even to eat or cry. It feels like I 'm just existing rather than living. I feel more alone than I ever have. I 've tried a lot of different ways to meet new people over the years, but it always ends up feeling almost impossible, especially being an introvert. I don't naturally put myself out there, and when I do, it usually feels awkward or forced. After some really bad experiences with friends about five years ago, I kind of retreated into myself and chose a more solitary lifestyle, thinking it would protect me. Now it just feels like I built my own prison. I do still have some good friends, but they 're busy with their own adult lives : work, relationships, responsibilities. I 'm happy for them, but at the same time I feel like I 'm the one whose life isn't going anywhere. I 'm the friend who 's stuck, the one whose life isn't going well, and it makes it even harder to reach out to them. I don't want to be the constant " problem " friend. I 'm not posting this because I want pity. I just needed to open up somewhere, to say out loud that I feel incredibly lonely and lost right now. If anyone relates to this or just feels like talking, I 'd honestly be really grateful to have someone to chat with. Even just a simple conversation would mean a lot.

Text Sample 83: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 26.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2451

I broke up with my first lover recently. We met online 5 years ago, basically grew up together from our teens into young adulthood. When it finally ended, I didn't cry, but there was this weird, heavy pain in my chest that I still don't fully understand. It 's like grief without tears. Because of my past – sexual trauma and watching my parents stuck in a bad marriage – I honestly didn't believe love was real for a long time. This relationship was the first thing that made me think, " Maybe it is. " I 'd been half-expecting the breakup for a while, but I thought I had more time. And then suddenly there was just … silence. No messages, no calls. The quiet made me realize how empty and lonely my life feels right now. It 's not the first time I 've felt like this. In 11th grade I lost my best friends of 6 years and felt completely alone. Back then, my family – my mom and my two brothers – stepped in. We went on trips, watched movies together, and it actually helped. I felt held, in a way. Now that closeness is gone, and I don't even know when or why it changed. We still see each other, but it feels formal, like we 're just going through the motions. My therapist keeps suggesting I spend more time with my family, but I feel like whatever we had before is gone for good, and that hurts in its own way. I 'm stuck between wanting connection and being terrified of it. I want to meet new people, hear different perspectives, feel alive again. But I 'm scared. Every relationship ends somehow, and I don't know if I can handle this kind of pain over and over. My loneliness feels like both a wound and a blanket – it hurts, but it also feels safer than risking another ending.

Text Sample 84: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 25.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1108
I keep seeing more and more guys – young and not-so-young – who are basically decent, functional people but can't seem to find a partner. Not abusive, not addicts, not completely socially inept. Just … ordinary men who, for whatever reason, never get picked. And the usual self-help advice from male and female influencers doesn't seem to move the needle much. What makes it harder is that a lot of " what women want " is either very vague, contradictory, or framed in a way that 's almost impossible to translate into concrete steps. Be confident but not arrogant, vulnerable but not needy, ambitious but not work-obsessed, etc. You can try to improve, but there 's no clear point where you can say, " I 've done the things, now I 'm allowed to have a relationship. " I 'm starting to think we 're heading toward a future where a lot more people – especially men – will be long-term single, not because there 's something fundamentally wrong with them, but because of a mix of social and technological changes that nobody really planned for. Most discussions I see focus on : - Men 's grief and frustration - Women 's disappointment and exhaustion - How to " cope " with loneliness At the same time, there are tons of channels and communities aimed at women that say, " Okay, you 're single, now here 's how to thrive. " They encourage travel, hobbies, mutual support groups, empowerment spaces, etc. There 's a whole positive narrative available. What 's the equivalent for men who realistically have no dating prospects? Not just " work out, get a hobby, grind your career, " but actual positive paths, activities, and networks that help men build meaningful, connected, fulfilling lives while single. I don't like the phrase " male crisis. " It sounds like the problem is men themselves, when in reality it feels more like men are stuck in the middle of rapid changes (dating apps, shifting norms, economic pressures) that they didn't create and can't control. This is kind of uncharted territory. So I 'm genuinely curious – from both men and women : What does a good, rich, emotionally supported life look like for a man who might stay single long-term? What kinds of communities, routines, or structures could help men not only survive this, but actually thrive?

Text Sample 85: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 25.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1371
I feel like I 'm living this weird split life where, on paper, things look almost ideal, and yet I 'm crushed by one missing piece. I 'm in my 30s now. I somehow managed to buy a house even though I don't make much. I have a handful of long-term friends who are genuinely good people. My job is stable and really aligned with my values, which I know is rare. I 've also got some significant health problems, but I 'm very motivated about managing them and I 'm doing the best I can there. The problem is that I don't have a romantic partner, and that emptiness feels like it eclipses everything else. Love has always been a huge thing for me. My first love was when I was 12, and it was intense in a way that still echoes 20 years later. It 's like that experience hard-wired me to need that kind of connection. I don't mean " sort of want it, " I mean it feels like a core emotional need that just never stops aching. I 've been in therapy. I use DBT skills. I spend time with my friends, I do things I enjoy, I try to build a meaningful life in every way I can. My therapist and I have gone over and over whether there 's some other imbalance or issue I 'm missing, and we keep coming back to the same conclusion : this need for romantic companionship is just extremely strong for me. And nothing I do seems to touch the depression that comes from that absence. I don't seem able to " fill the gap ” with other forms of connection, no matter how hard I try or how much I intellectually understand that I ’m not supposed to rely on one thing for happiness. I ’m feeling desperate and stuck. Has anyone else been here and found anything that actually helped? Any perspectives or approaches I might not have tried yet?

Text Sample 86: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 24.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t810_

I turned 20 today and it honestly just feels like any other lonely day, maybe a bit worse. So far only one person has said happy birthday to me. My own family hasn’t said anything. I ’ve also had the flu for the last four days, so I ’m stuck in bed feeling physically awful on top of everything else. I ’m kind of used to being alone, so I didn’t expect much, but it still stings more than I want to admit. I grew up in a family where we don’t talk about feelings at all. No “ I love you, ” no real conversations about what ’s going on inside. Because of that, opening up to people and being social feels almost impossible sometimes. It ’s like I never learned how. About three years ago I met a girl on Discord. We were friends for a year, then we became long-distance partners. That year we were together was honestly the best I ’ve ever felt. We had this really beautiful connection. I could tell her about my day, my dreams, my fears. We made plans together and had shared goals. For once, I felt like I wasn’t just drifting through life. I had direction, and a future that actually seemed worth moving toward. She ended things around our one-year anniversary because of external reasons. I still loved her, but it didn’t matter. It ’s been about ten months since then. I don’t miss her specifically as intensely anymore, but I really miss what we had. That feeling of being understood, of having someone I could be completely honest with. Someone who cared about my day and my future, and whose future I cared about too. Now I just feel lost again. I miss having that deep emotional connection more than anything. I don’t even know how to find something like that again, especially when I struggle so much with opening up in the first place. I guess I just needed to put this somewhere, because I don’t really have anyone in my life I can say it to.

Text Sample 87: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 24.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t388_

The last two years have honestly been a mess, and I don’t even fully recognize the person I became. It kind of started with this whole incident in another city – betrayal, misunderstandings, all that drama – and instead of dealing with it in a healthy way, I went off the deep end with drugs and alcohol. I got really envious of my friends ’ achievements, started acting narcissistic, angry, just … ugly. I pushed so many people away that I ’ve basically lost around 90 On top of that, I lost four jobs and my health went downhill. I ended up moving back to my hometown last November. Now I just feel regret about how everything went. The job I have here is in a really toxic firm, and I barely have any friends at work. I ’ve had jaundice twice now – once in early November and again just two weeks ago – which makes everything feel even more fragile. My hometown feels boring as hell. I don’t have much time or many opportunities to meet new people, and I ’m just kind of existing. I keep telling myself I ’ll move again once I upskill and buy the things I need, but right now it just feels like I ’m stuck in limbo. Most of my “ social life ” is literally talking to AI. I talk about my past, ask how to feel better, and yeah, it gives me some validation, but it ’s getting old. It ’s the same cycle over and over, and I ’m tired of relying on something that isn’t even a real person. I wish I could find actual friends again. Maybe even just a girl to talk to, online or offline, someone who 'd actually listen and share stuff back. I 'm so exhausted from feeling this intensely lonely all the time. I don't even know what this post is besides a vent. If you read this, I hope this year treats you well. I 'm not sure what mine is going to look like.

Text Sample 88: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 23.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1793

I 'm so tired. Not just physically, but in a way that feels like something inside me has burned out. I keep saying to myself that my " soul is dead, " and that 's honestly the closest thing I have to describing it. I don't even understand my own feelings anymore. I 'm sad, but also kind of numb, like everything is happening behind a thick piece of glass. I avoid talking to my family as much as I can. I don't know what to say to them, and I don't want to pretend I 'm okay when I 'm not. I don't really have close friends either, just coworkers I talk to at work. I don't trust people. I used to hang out more, but I stopped because it never actually made me happy. It just felt like going through the motions. Dating feels pointless. Every time I start to care about someone, it ends up feeling worthless, like it was a waste of time to open up in the first place. I feel stuck with no real goals, no clear future, just existing. On top of that, I 'm dealing with financial problems, constant overthinking, trust issues, depression, and anxiety. It all just piles up. I 've tried so many things to cope. I 've tried leaning on religious faith, and I 've tried other " good " and " bad " ways of coping. Nothing seems to actually help. I 've even gone to therapy, but it hasn't felt useful because I can't explain what exactly makes me so sad. I just am. I feel completely lost about what to do with my life, like I 'm wandering without a map and every direction looks wrong.

Text Sample 89: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 23.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t197_

Last year feels like it happened to a different person. I was on track for a promotion, had a solid friend group, and there was this girl I really liked. For the first time in a long time, I actually felt like things were moving in the right direction. I started to picture a future where I wasn't constantly lonely or doubting myself. Then everything just fell apart. The promotion fell through. I started school on top of working, and that completely wrecked my social life. I stopped seeing my friends as much, and they slowly drifted away. The girl I liked told me she only wanted something casual and that she doesn't catch feelings. I really loved her, and hearing that just crushed me. I ended up quitting my job, which meant I lost my work friends too. I got depressed, stopped working out, and isolated myself. It felt like I went from having momentum to just ... nothing. No progress, no people, no purpose. Now I 'm trying to rebuild, but it doesn't feel hopeful the way it did before. I have a new job, but I don't really like the people there. I started working out again, but I feel weak and everything hurts. I 'm planning to go back to school in the summer and give it another shot. The thing is, I don't really have many real friends anymore. My relationship with my family isn't great. And a romantic relationship honestly feels unrealistic at this point. I 'm trying to " improve myself " like everyone always says, but underneath it all I still feel this deep pain. I feel worthless a lot of the time, like I 'll never be seen as worth anyone 's time. Like I 'm never going to be good enough at anything — not as a partner, not as a friend, not in my career. It 's hard to keep going and keep trying when it feels like everything I do just proves that belief right.

Text Sample 90: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 23.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1761

I ’m 27 and I feel like I ’ve hit a wall in every direction. My family is tiny and toxic, and I barely speak to them. I don’t have any close friends. I ’ve basically learned that the only person I can rely on is myself, and even I ’m not doing a great job of holding it together lately. For years, my two cats were my main emotional support. They were the only ones who were always there when I came home. One of them died seven months ago, and I still feel that loss every day. Now my other cat ’s health is declining, and it feels like the last bit of stability I had is slipping away. My own health is getting worse too, physically and mentally, but I can’t afford proper medical care. My job pays just enough that I don’t qualify for help like food stamps, but not enough to actually live comfortably. Rent is high even with a roommate, and then there ’s my car payment, insurance, debt, groceries, and vet/medicine bills for my cat. Every month feels like a balancing act I ’m slowly losing. On top of that, I ’m dealing with severe OCD, depression, anxiety, and ADHD. I know I need therapy, meds, maybe even a proper evaluation, but all of that costs money I don’t have. It feels like I ’m stuck in this loop where I can’t get better because I ’m poor, and I can’t stop being poor because I ’m not well enough to do more. I don’t have a support system. No family safety net, no partner, no close friends. I don’t have a college degree, and I don’t have the money or motivation to go back to school. I keep thinking about how many people are in similar situations, and how much of life comes down to whether you were born with financial and emotional support. People don’t talk enough about how big a privilege it is to have that from the start. Some of us are just trying to survive without it, and it ’s exhausting.

Text Sample 91: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 23.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1709

I ’m 22 and I feel like I ’ve already messed everything up. I didn’t go to college. I work a low-level customer service job, and every shift just makes me feel like I ’ve already failed at life. I know I ’m not stupid, but I feel like I have no way to prove I ’m actually smart or capable. When I look at people my age in university or starting “ real ” careers, I feel like I ’m stuck at the bottom with no ladder. I grew up mostly with my grandma, and I think that kind of messed with how I connect to people. I don’t really have a solid friend group. I have people I talk to sometimes, but no one I feel close to. I overthink every single thing I say. I replay conversations in my head and cringe at myself. I feel like I ’m either too quiet or too weird or just … unnecessary. I struggle a lot with how I see myself. Some days I feel genuinely pathetic and ugly. School was a nightmare because of (probably) undiagnosed ADHD. I could never focus, I procrastinated everything, I avoided people, and I never built any good habits. That ’s a big reason I didn’t go to college, and part of me is scared that even if I tried now, I ’d just fail again in the same ways. Social stuff drains me. Going out, going to the gym, just existing around people makes me feel awkward and anxious. I overthink to the point where I feel “ kinda autistic ” (not in a joking way, just in how intensely I analyze everything I do or say). I feel like everyone can see how uncomfortable I am. I ’ve been trying to improve. I ’ve lost some weight, started working out, treating my acne, doing small self-care things. But it feels like nothing is enough, and that at 22 I ’m already so behind that I ’ll never catch up. I don’t even care that much about being “ successful ” in the traditional sense. I just want connection. I want friends. I want to maybe date. I want someone I can talk to without feeling like I ’m a burden or some boring, unambitious loser. I don't really have anyone to talk to about this, which is why I 'm posting. If anyone has advice on how to build connections from basically zero, or how to deal with feeling this behind and broken, I 'd really appreciate it.

Text Sample 92: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 23.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t006_

I grew up constantly moving – different cities, different countries, different schools and universities. I was " the new kid " so many times I lost count. I 'd make friends, sometimes even good ones, and then we 'd move again. At first we 'd stay in touch, but over time it always faded. It 's just so much easier to keep a friendship going when you see each other regularly than when it 's all effort and planning and messages across distance. It slowly turned into this " out of sight, out of mind " pattern for me. Now I 've actually been in the same place for about five years, which is the longest I 've ever stayed anywhere. But my friendships still feel temporary. I make acquaintances, have friendly conversations, sometimes hang out a few times, but it rarely goes deeper. I struggle to find the emotional energy or even the desire to really invest in people or to start new connections from scratch. I 'm starting to wonder if I 've internalized the idea that everyone is transient, that no one sticks around. Maybe I 'm subconsciously protecting myself from the hurt of losing people by never letting them get too close in the first place. On the surface I want deep, stable connections, but when opportunities appear, I almost … pull back. Or I just don't follow through. The result is that I feel really unmoored and lonely, like I 'm floating through places and people without ever really belonging anywhere. I want to change this, but I don't quite know how to override whatever 's going on underneath. Has anyone else had a similar experience, especially people who moved around a lot growing up? Did you notice the same " everyone is temporary " mindset? If so, how did you manage it or start to change it? What helped you actually build and maintain deeper friendships instead of just letting everything stay on the surface and fade away?

Text Sample 93: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 23.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1466

I 'm 34 and honestly can't remember the last time I was genuinely happy. My dad died when I was 17, and from that moment it felt like my own life stopped. I stepped into the " man of the house " role without really thinking about it. I worked, handed over money, put my own interests and plans on hold so my mom and younger sister would be okay. For years, that was just my identity : the provider. Looking back, it feels like that 's all I ever was to anyone. Romantic partners, friends, even my own family … it always seemed like they were more interested in what I could do for them than in who I actually am. I don't remember many moments where I felt seen as a person rather than a resource. A few years ago I hit some financial hardship and was briefly unemployed. After everything I had done, my mom and sister basically treated me like I was useless, like I 'd lost my only value. It was like I became disposable overnight. That broke something in me. Now I live alone. I haven't seen my family in about four years. We barely speak, and when we do, it 's shallow and infrequent. My views on love and marriage are pretty much wrecked. It 's hard to believe in those things when your main experience of " love " is being needed only as long as you 're useful. I 'm sharing this here because I don't really have anyone in my life who wants to spend time with me just to be with me. I feel like I 've spent my whole adult life taking care of others, and somehow ended up completely alone.

Text Sample 94: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 23.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1224

I ’m 24 and right now life feels like it ’s caving in from a bunch of directions at once. I ’ve been dealing with cyclical depression, ADHD, and chronic anxiety for years, but things got worse recently to the point that I had to stop working. Losing that stability has been really scary, and it ’s left me feeling pretty lost and useless. The only real comfort I have day to day is my two cats. They ’re my little family and honestly the reason I keep pushing through. One of them, Azraël, suddenly needed unexpected surgery, and of course it happened right when my mental health and finances were already hanging by a thread. I don’t regret getting him the care he needed for a second, but the bills have hit me hard and I ’m really struggling to keep up. I feel really uncomfortable and vulnerable even writing this, but I set up a GoFundMe to try to stay afloat. If anyone is able and willing to help, even a tiny amount, it would mean more than I can put into words. I completely understand that most people are struggling right now, so please don’t feel any pressure or obligation. If you can’t donate, just sending some kind thoughts or sharing a kind word would still mean a lot. Thank you for reading this and for any support at all, even if it ’s just taking a moment to care.

Text Sample 95: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 23.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2089

I ’m 21 and I feel like I ’ve basically lived my whole life on the outside looking in. I ’ve never had close friends, never had a girlfriend, and most days it feels like I ’m just drifting through life completely invisible. Lately I ’ve been trying to improve myself physically – working out, taking care of my appearance, that kind of thing – and there ’s been some progress there. But mentally I ’m a mess. I have no one I can really talk to about what ’s going on in my head. The only person I even kind of open up to is my mom, and her advice is always just “ cheer up ” or “ don’t think like that. ” I know she means well, but it feels so shallow and doesn’t actually help. Whenever I think about telling someone how I really feel, I immediately feel like a burden. I don’t want to dump my problems on people or make them feel like they have to “ play therapist ” for me. So I just keep everything inside and it ’s eating at me. I keep telling myself I need to fix myself before I can expect to have meaningful relationships, but I don’t even know where to start. For those of you who ’ve also had no relationships and spent years feeling invisible, how did you actually make progress? How did you go from this to something better? I ’m honestly scared that if this loneliness keeps growing, I might end up hurting myself. I don’t want that. I want to learn how to be at least somewhat content on my own, and also how to eventually build real connections. Any advice or personal experiences would mean a lot.

Text Sample 96: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 22.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t749_

I ’m 31 now and it feels like my whole adult life has just been one long lesson in being used and then discarded. I met my ex-husband when I was 21. We got married, had a child, and for six years I stayed even though he cheated on me over and over. I kept trying to make it work for our son, kept hoping he ’d change, but in the end he left us. He wants nothing to do with our child now. Watching my son grow up without a dad who even cares to know him is its own kind of heartbreak. After a year on my own, I thought maybe I was ready to try again. I started dating someone long-distance. Eventually I moved to be with him, about two hours away from my family. It felt like a big risk, but I really believed in us. We were together for 3.5 years. Between my son and his two kids, we had three children in the house most of the time. I was the one mostly supporting us. When he was unemployed and depressed, I spent hours helping him apply for jobs, redoing his resume, pushing him to not give up. He finally got a job he liked, then a promotion to manager, and even a company truck. I was genuinely happy for him. And then he broke up with me. It 's hard not to see a pattern : both men left right after they " got everything " they seemed to want—stability, support, someone to carry them through the hard parts. Once life started looking up for them, I was suddenly no longer needed. Now I 'm here, two hours from my family, feeling like most of my light is just…gone. I feel empty and stupid for trusting again. I feel like I poured myself into other people until there was nothing left for me, and now I 'm alone with a child to raise and no one to lean on. I don't even know what I 'm looking for by posting this. I just feel so used and so alone.

Text Sample 97: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 22.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1626

I 've been feeling lonely for about 4–5 years now. It used to feel like this heavy, constant thing I was dragging around. I still feel lonely, but over the last six months I 've started coping a bit better, and I wanted to share what 's helped me, in case it helps someone else too. One big thing was focusing on small, positive social interactions instead of chasing some perfect friend group or relationship. A short, pleasant chat with a coworker, a barista remembering my order, a quick online conversation that doesn't end in drama – I started counting those as " wins " instead of dismissing them as meaningless. It made me feel less invisible and a bit more confident. I also started doing more things alone that I genuinely enjoy, not because they 'd make me more " interesting " or help me meet people, but just because they feel good in themselves. That shift took a lot of pressure off hobbies. It 's easier to keep going when the reward is built-in, not dependent on whether I make a friend. Another hard lesson was cutting off people who weren't really there for me. Keeping " friends " who constantly flake, ignore you, or only show up when it 's convenient just made me feel more alone. Letting go hurt, but it also made space for the idea that there are so many people in the world, and I don't have to cling to the ones who don't treat me well. Rejection still sucks. But I realized that avoiding it doesn't save me from loneliness – it just guarantees it. Changing my mindset has been slow and uncomfortable, and it hasn't " cured " my loneliness, but it 's made it more bearable. I feel a little braver about putting myself out there, and that 's something.

Text Sample 98: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 22.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1785

I feel like I 've spent my whole life standing just outside of everyone else 's circle. It started in grade school. My classmates didn't talk to me unless they had to, and even some teachers acted like I wasn't there. The only person who treated me like a real human being was the cleaning lady, who was kind and actually spoke to me. That pretty much set the tone for everything that came after. I tried to make friends in childhood, in my teens, and later at university, but everything stayed on the surface. People would chat with me in class or in group projects, but they never actually included me in anything. No one invited me to any graduation parties, and nobody came to mine. It was like I was always " nice enough to talk to, " but never someone they thought to actually spend time with. Romantic stuff hasn't gone anywhere either. On the rare occasions someone showed interest, it fizzled out fast. I 've been ghosted after a few dates more than once. It 's like as soon as someone gets a slightly closer look, they decide I 'm not worth sticking around for. Even therapy hasn't really worked out. One therapist ended things after about five sessions, and another never even scheduled a second one. That hurt in a different way, like even the people whose job it is to listen and help don't really want to deal with me. My relationships with family and coworkers are the same : polite, functional, but shallow. I try to connect, but it never seems to go anywhere deeper. Over time, I 've gone pretty numb to it. I just expect to be ignored now, and I 'm actually surprised when someone doesn't overlook me. At this point, my only real friends are my parents. I 'm grateful for them, but it 's hard not to feel like that says something about me that no one else ever really chooses me.

Text Sample 99: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 22.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1239
I 'm over 30 and started transitioning in 2023, and in a lot of ways it was the best thing I 've ever done for myself. It 's like so much of the self-hate and mental health chaos I 'd been dragging around for years finally made sense and started to ease. For the first time, I actually feel like I 'm living as myself. But at the same time, I feel absolutely terrified and alone. The global anti-trans climate has me constantly on edge. It feels like there 's this huge, growing wave of hatred aimed at people like me, and I 'm just standing there in the open with no shelter. That fear mixes with another, more personal one : the fear that I 'm going to be alone forever. I 've been single since 2017. Nine years. I 've done everything people say you 're " supposed " to do : I go to therapy, I work on myself, I go to the gym, I have hobbies, I join clubs and groups, I meet new people, I 've pushed myself to be more social even though I 'm autistic and introverted. I 've tried to pursue romantic interests instead of just waiting for something to happen. I 've made friends. I 've really, genuinely tried. And yet nothing changes. Everyone around me seems to be in long-term relationships, building lives with someone, while I just … don't. I 'm happy for them, but it also hurts so much. It makes me feel like there 's something fundamentally wrong with me, like love is some door that just won't open no matter how many times I knock. My friends are busy and not available often. I feel like a side character in everyone else 's life. The loneliness is so heavy that it 's starting to turn into suicidal thoughts. I told my therapist and asked for a referral to a psychiatrist, because I know I 'm depressed. But even if meds help, and even if friendships get a bit better, it still feels like there 's this huge missing piece. I don't understand why love seems to be denied to me, and I 'm really starting to feel like I can't live like this much longer.

Text Sample 100: POS Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 22.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1472_gpt.txt
I 'm 30, live in rural western PA, financially stable, own my home, and I actually love my job as a field service tech. On paper, I know I 'm in a good spot. But I feel incredibly alone. In 2020 I went through a really traumatic breakup. My ex cheated on me, got pregnant, and told me I was the father. I believed her, got attached to the idea, and then a DNA test proved I wasn't. That whole situation wrecked me. Since then I ’ve had serious trust issues. I became bitter, angry, and honestly not a pleasant person to be around. Because of that, I ended up losing my two best friends. We had a falling out and they ’ve made it clear they want nothing to do with me anymore. I ’ve tried to fix it, but they refuse to reconcile. So now it ’s just…me. Work and home. That ’s my whole life. Only in the last year have I started to feel ready to date again. I ’ve gone on a few dates, but there was no real connection. I struggle with severe social anxiety, and my job keeps me really busy, so meeting people is hard. Online dating feels like shouting into the void. In-person, I freeze up or overthink everything. I ’m lonely as hell. I see people my age getting married, having kids, going on trips with friends, and I feel this constant FOMO, like life is passing me by while I ’m stuck on the sidelines. I just want a girlfriend, someone to share things with, to come home to, to feel like I ’m not doing all of this alone. I don’t really know what I ’m looking for by posting this. Maybe I just needed to get it off my chest.

Text Sample 101: POS Dim 2 – human – Score 26.00 – human/t1225_human.txt
I have hobbies, a side hustle, and keep myself busy with my studies. But when im not busy with these things, i feel empty. I feel so lonely. I crave for some kind of emotional connection with someone. I have friends but i never open up with them. I have trust issues. I listen to their rants, vents, and their random stories and thoughts but im having a hard time doing the same for them. Maybe because i know they wouldnt understand me and i live a double life. I keep a lot of secrets because of my strict religion. And growing up, i was constantly shamed for almost everything i do. I hate that i feel such a complex person. I wish i was normal. Ever since I had my first heartbreak, i have a hard time being alone. I always crave to be loved. Im always talking to some guy and usually it doesnt last. I had 2 boyfriends within 3 years and each lasted only for a year. I ’m probably addicted to male attention atp. (And also, im not allowed to have a bf lol.) Im probably addicted because guys are so good at pretending to care which i really crave for. At least i got a safe space to overshare my life TEMPORARILY. If it doesnt work out I can just find someone else to talk to who can occupy the void in me and repeat. Ive given up on dating genuinely as well, with all the dating rules on social media like”dont double text”,”dont show too much affection, theyll lose attraction”etc. Idek if genuine love is possible these days. But if love does exist, i dont think i ’ll ever experience it. I dont want advice or anything, i just wanna let feelings out.

Text Sample 102: POS Dim 2 – human – Score 25.00 – human/t1265_human.txt
Parents hate me. Pretty sure my sister finds me as a horrible weird person. Antisocial. Don’t talk to anybody. I have the urge to cry all the time but I just hold it in. I feel I ’ve forgotten to cry. Just wanna let it out but at the same time not want to. I have most of the things I ’ve ever wanted but past that I ’m just a failure. I ’m a burden and shame to the people I try to surround myself with. I promised my self that I would just give up this time around but I keep giving in to false hope and it just hurts even more. My entire life I have this one picture engrained in my mind, and it ’s that same look of disappointment people have of me, their anger, their sadness caused by me, their negative experiences, all because of me. I ’ve said some pretty horrible things to defend myself in heated situations. Some of which I do mean because of repeated trauma but deep down I know they ’re right. There ’s this side of me that envisions wild success in the future but with that also comes the person that made it happen. I ’ve contemplated many times. Some times after big things, sometimes casually, sometimes in my dreams. I know that I ’ll never be able to be normal. I ’ve just accepted it. I will always be the miserable person I am, no matter how good or how bad things get. I grew up with the sole mindset that I am the burden, I am the discrepancy, I am trash that needs to be thrown away. No one will ever love me, understand me. It ’s a dog eat dog world. I just wish i was normal. So enough of the rant. Been thinking about it. Thought of all the possible ways but not sure which one would be the easiest and least painful. Also don’t know how to make it so that it will happen so casually that nobody will notice. Feel like my existence has no significance. I only consume and not give anything in return. Just wished that somebody loved and understood me. Not just for a moment but they really understand me.

Text Sample 103: POS Dim 2 – human – Score 25.00 – human/t2407_human.txt
I feel like I ’ve kind of doomed myself and I ’m just going to die alone with no one who really gives a fuck about my existence I dropped out of high school because it was too much for me to deal with on top of all my other problems in life so I ’ve basically cut myself off from finding new people to talk to I only have like three friends at most and we barely even hang out I ’m isolated and trapped inside all day and I ’ve basically made it impossible for me to meet new people I feel like at some point I ’ll be forced to become a normal slave in society and get a 9-5 office job or some degrading job like that and I ’ll just be the guy who ’s super addicted to substances because it doesn’t matter if it ’s harmful if no one really cares or reaches out it doesn’t matter if the substances ruin my organs slowly if no one even bothers to seem like they care I ’ll just be that one dude that dies and gets forgotten in a span of two weeks I ’ve ruined any chances of me finding a partner in life and I ’ve given up on trying to even believe that my life will just magically get better one day my life has been just fucked up and horrible for the past five years and I can’t do this anymore who would it even affect if I just disappeared my parents obviously don’t care and I can’t think of anyone that really ever cared I ’ve lost myself and no matter how hard I try I can’t seem to find myself again I ’m scared of the future and I ’m hoping by the 0.00001

Text Sample 104: POS Dim 2 – human – Score 24.00 – human/t2451_human.txt
A few days ago I broke up with my lover, it was very confusing for me to decide how to feel, I didn’t cry, but I felt some kind of pain in my chest that I couldn’t quite identify. He was my first, I never was a girl who believes in love, having so much sexual trauma along with parents in a bad marriage, left me denying that love is even real. We met online 5 years ago so we grew up from being teenagers to young adults together, he admitted his feelings for me last April, it was then I realized how much effects he has on me and how I ’ve never felt like this with any other guy. I knew this day when we would break up will come, I just didn’t expect it to be so soon. The moment of silence that followed made me realize how lonely my life has my life recently been. In the 11th grade I lost my best friends of 6 years, back then I felt lonely and devastated but my family had my back, we went to trips and watched movies together. Me, my mom and my two brothers. However this changed, quickly. I don’t even remember what happened, we just aren’t spending as much time together and everything started to feel more and more formal. It makes me feel so sad when my therapist ask me to try and spend time with my family, not knowing how to tell her that it ’ll never be the same anymore. I just find both pain and comfort in my loneliness, I want to get to know people and to listen for other point of views. But what if I get hurt again? Every relationship will eventually come to an end, how do I know this end won’t hurt me?

Text Sample 105: POS Dim 2 – human – Score 23.00 – human/t2608_human.txt
I have no idea how this works but hopefully im doing it right. Its quite ironic, i used to joke around with my friends about having reddit but here i am,, idt anybody gives a crap but wtv So ive been an introverted and dependent person for the whole of my life but i guess ive gotten lucky because ive always been in the company of friends. Like even when i was bullied in pri sch, i still had friends who i keep in touch with even now, middle school, high school, all that, and ive still had close friendships. But this time in senior sch, i moved again really far away so i literally know nothing so i dont know why i expected anything but i guess it really hurts? Idk ive always been dependent and surrounded by ppl, so as an introvert i guess i took advantage of the fact that someone was going to approach me and we wld b friends. Idk like i guess it really hurts to take the fall as someone who was constantly surrounded by close friends whom i could be myself around and be so extremely stupid with,, to being the loner with headphones on that only sits at the library or in the toilets during break times. Like i sound so petty but ive struggled with mental health since as young as 10 so i guess being a loner just heightens the pain. My mind begins to wander to crazy places and i either cry and silently wail like hell every day or i become carefree and independent. This wavering between emotions gets me really tired and my head hurts. I find that the only thing i want is a great big hug from someone who cares. Yeah,, And my family life had actually gotten better like my bond with them is really strong and i am conversely enjoying school but like,, does it have to come at the expense of having company? Idk im sorry for dumping my feelings out but if i didnt do this i dont think i could go on for longer. Sorry abt this,, but yeah thanks fr reading ig :>

Text Sample 106: POS Dim 2 – human – Score 23.00 – human/t468_human.txt
Hi. First of all, Merry Christmas to you all! My name ’s Hugo, I ’m from Spain, and almost 23 years old. I don’t want to sound thirsty or desperated. I know that ’s such a turn-off. I just want to get this out my chest. I lost my job due to depression almost a month ago and started taking meds for it after 15 years of just bearing with everything on my own. Not very wise of me not asking for help earlier, but who can trust public healthcare nowadays? Anyways... I don’t feel comfortable giving many details about my life publicly because I hate feeling myself exposed. I just wanna say I feel completely drained off. I ’ve been locked up home for the last three weeks just playing videogames and sleeping. Not even eating nor crying because I have no energy for it. I ’ve never felt myself so alone in my entire life. I tried everything you can imagine (and I mean it) to get to know new people, even if it ’s online, but meeting new people is almost impossible nowadays, even more if you ’re introverted like me. It ’s not my first period of solitude, but it ’s being the worst. I ’ve always been such an expressive guy with friends, but things always happen in all groups and they always end up tearing apart. I had traumatic experiences with old”friends”of mine that led me to adopt a more solitary and sedentary lifestyle five years ago. I have good friends nowadays, yeah, but we ’re all adults and they all have their own relationships and works to take care of. I ’m just that one friend whose life ’s not going as well as theirs. So... That ’s it. I don’t mean to make anyone feel bad about me or talk to me out of pityness at all. I just wanted to open up, since I feel myself drowned in my own constant rumination and loneliness. If anybody feels like talking, I ’d be happy and grateful for having someone to speak with. <3 Thank you for reading this. Best regards, - Hugo 💜

Text Sample 107: POS Dim 2 – human – Score 23.00 – human/t1371_human.txt
The first time I ever felt in love, it was someone I met when I was 12. Even now 20 years later, I think about him and how much influence that one year had on me. Love is one of the most fulfilling emotions in my life. When I look at the life that I ’ve built for myself, I ’m proud of how much I ’ve pulled through. My life has everything I could possibly ask for, it ’s damn near perfect. I was able to buy myself a house even though I just make a couple dollars above minimum wage, I ’m still friends with people from childhood and all of them are genuinely good people, I have a stable career field that is in line with my values and needs. I have a lot of health problems, but I have the will to improve my health as much as I can. Also, if it wasn’t for my health problems, I would be in top shape with the amount of effort I put in. The only thing I don’t have is a romantic partner. It makes me severely depressed. I feel like nothing helps. I ’ve done intensive outpatient for depression. I will make time to do activities that I enjoy, prioritize spending time with friends. Practice DBT skills. Even after a lot of therapy sessions, my therapist kind of came down to the conclusion that it doesn’t appear that I ’m imbalanced in some other area of my life causing me to be this sad about not having romantic partner. But my instinctual emotional need for romantic companionship is just really strong. I hate it. I want it to end. I want it to stop. I can’t stand it. I literally keep trying to lean into other things to make up for how much this hurts me, but it doesn’t work. I don’t know what to do with myself. I don’t know if anybody has some crazy ideas that I haven’t considered.

Text Sample 108: POS Dim 2 – human – Score 22.00 – human/t1839_human.txt
Hello. I really don’t know what exactly I ’m on here for. I go expelled from my”regular”brick school when I was in sixth grade. I ’ve been doing online school since then. I have pretty intense social anxiety and only two”friends”. I haven’t seen them in person in years. They don’t live super far away. They are never really interested in talking to me and they ’ve done some pretty iffy things before. I ’m gay btw, which is relevant. One friend dated this guy who would call me the f slur and tell me to KMS on numerous occasions and she was there for each of them. She dated him for like two years, there break up was unrelated. Another instance we were talking to a guy in our grade who repeatedly called me similar stuff and threatened to set me on fire. She only”denounced”him when he left. Like a week later she posted the two of them and another girl huddled together smiling as friends. The other friend once laughed when some kind of friend of hers was being very actively homophobic and some other minor”micro aggressions”. I am really lonely, I ’ve had off and on depression and anxiety for like three years, had to repeat my junior year because I wasn’t doing my school work during my depression. Again I just came on here to vent on a whim. I am scared I ’ll never meet a guy or have any real social life. I usually only leave my house like once a month, with my parents. I don't have a driver 's license. When I 'm around people ik (my parents and siblings) I 'm usually a confident person and when I 'm alone I like think of myself as awesome and confident, able to stand up for myself, but when I 'm on a walk by myself (which my therapist told me I should do) I get really nervous about running into someone, especially men, my head is always on a swivel and I turn around if I see someone coming my way, I 've walked two blocks out of my way just to avoid a couple walking their dog two last week. I don't really know what you guys could say but here goes.

Text Sample 109: POS Dim 2 – human – Score 22.00 – human/t2287_human.txt
I feel really lonely these days, big surprise and my therapist tells me she hears it from many of her clients as well. I hear it from both sides, I 've talked about it with women and male friends, some I 've known for 10+ years. My friend she 's married and she tells me how lonely she feels, because it 's only her and her husband. She loves him and thats her best friend but there 's still a lack of community for her. It's not an economic issue because there are millionaires I know who feel desperately alone and those living close to near homelessness whom feel alone. I 'm not here with answers really, I am more genuinely curious with how you all cope with this day-to-day phenomenon. It feels like I go out of my way to practice integration and community based values everyday, understand compromise. Focusing my energy on being less self obsessed or hyper individualistic. I don't feel like it 's because people are really that bad socially, or people are losers and not working hard enough. In my opinion, the reality of human connection is : it takes two to tango. You have to give up a level of uncertainty and control to be apart of any relationship or community. It 's a risk, but it feels like we 've become like the corporations. It 's not worth a risk investment in humanity if it doesn't benefit. Protecting our inner worlds from any person who may threaten our sense of self and worldview. When there is one red flag, people jump ship. I 'm not condoning allowing toxic behavior, but there has to be some leeway for humans to make a mistake or take a risk. I'm even a prisoner to this, cutting people off who don't serve me. Maybe, if I gave it more time the kinks could be rolled out, or we find common ground. I guess for me it feels like I 'm disposable. Even when I 've spent time to make a career for myself that I 'm proud of. It feels like a wall or its own separate armor. They don't want me for me, just what being in proximity to me could mean for them. I 'm just ranting but hope someone resonates.

Text Sample 110: POS Dim 2 – human – Score 22.00 – human/t2273_human.txt
I feel disconnected to my family. I try to be the loving supportive father and husband. I love my family but I built a lot of resentment. Before I get into why I had resentment I should explain a few things. One my wife and I have been together for 25 years … wow just typing that out feels heavy. She is chronically ill with many autoimmune issues, including Ehlers danlos syndrome, Reynard syndrome, a spina bifida Oculta, anemia, chronic fatigue syndrome. IBS. We have four kids that are living with us 23 15, 13 and eight. All of them have some form of special needs the older three are high functioning and with Reminders and guidance they can function on their own. Our youngest is nonverbal autistic level three. I am a father of four for the last 16 years I have been the sole breadwinner. For at least the last 5 I have done 90 percent of the cooking and cleaning. When I ask for help I am asking too much. If I ask my wife not to sleep till noon and have breakfast or a coffee together I am asking too much. I feel my purpose is to take care of everything and don't disagree with my wife and don't ask my kids to do anything. How the fuck did my life get like this? Work is my vacation. I feel liked and respected hell my opinions matter at work. But at home I feel like a glorified servant. This is not a poor me but a reflection of my thought process. To feel good mentally I work out 2-3 times a week for mental and emotional health. So I am not angry or depressed when I get off work I sneak away a quick joint. I want to be happy without having to relay on weed. I am not depressed or having suicidal thoughts. I see no reason for self harm or hurting others. But I am tired of doing it all. I am tired of feeling silenced. Forgive the rant.

Text Sample 111: POS Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score 12.00 – generic_gpt/t1404_gpt.txt
I don't really know how to talk about this in real life, so I 'm dumping it here. Lately I 've been feeling like I 'm living next to other people 's lives instead of in my own. I go through the motions : work, commute, groceries, scrolling on my phone until I 'm tired enough to sleep. I talk to coworkers about tasks and deadlines, but as soon as it veers into anything personal, I panic a bit inside and steer it back to " safe " topics. Then I go home and feel weirdly hurt that no one really knows me. There are people around me, technically. I 'm not completely isolated. I have acquaintances, a group chat that 's mostly memes, some old friends I occasionally text. But everything feels thin, like a bad phone signal. I keep craving those deep, comfortable connections where you can just exist around someone without feeling like you 're performing. Instead, I 'm always hyper-aware of how I 'm coming across, like I 'm auditioning for the role of a normal human. What 's confusing is that I 'm not even sure who the " real me " is anymore. When I 'm alone too long, I feel hollow and disconnected from myself. When I 'm with people, I feel like I 'm wearing a costume. I leave social situations exhausted, replaying every small thing I said, convinced I sounded weird or boring or too much. Weekends are the worst. I wake up with this heavy feeling in my chest, knowing I have two days to fill and no one who 's really expecting me. Sometimes I 'll try to reach out and suggest something, and if people are busy or just don't respond, it hits way harder than it should. Then I feel pathetic for caring so much. I 've tried the usual advice : hobbies, online communities, being the one to initiate. It helps a bit, but it still feels like I 'm standing outside a house, looking through the window at other people laughing together. I can see them clearly, but there 's this invisible barrier between us that I can't figure out how to cross. I don't even know what I 'm asking for. I guess I just wanted to say this somewhere.

Text Sample 112: POS Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score 12.00 – generic_gpt/t2659_gpt.txt
I don't really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but I feel like I 'm slowly disappearing from everyone 's life while still being physically present. On paper I 'm not " alone. " I have a job, coworkers who are polite, a couple of old friends I text every now and then, family members who send the occasional " how are you " message. But none of it feels like it actually touches me. It 's like I 'm behind glass, watching my own life from the outside. I go through the motions : wake up, commute, work, scroll on my phone, pretend to laugh at things, come home, eat something random, and then just sit there. I keep the TV or YouTube on just for background noise so the silence doesn't feel so heavy. I keep checking my phone hoping someone will message me first, and most of the time it 's just notifications from apps I don't care about. When I do talk to people, it feels like I 'm playing a character who 's more socially acceptable than the real me. I make small talk, I say " I 'm fine, " I ask questions back so they won't notice I 'm not actually sharing anything. I can't remember the last time I was fully honest with someone about how lonely I feel without worrying they 'd see me as needy or pathetic. What really messes with my head is that I used to have real connections. In school and a bit in college, there were people who actually knew me. Over time everyone drifted away, got partners, moved, got busy. I know that 's normal, but it feels like I got left at the train station while everyone else 's life took off. I 'm stuck replaying old memories because I don't have many new ones that involve actual closeness. I 've tried to " fix " this the way people suggest—joining groups, trying hobbies, being more " open"—but I always end up feeling like an extra in everyone else 's story. People are friendly enough, but it doesn't go deeper. I leave, go home, and the emptiness hits even harder, like proof that there 's something about me that just doesn't stick with anyone. I don't even know what I 'm asking for. I just needed to put this somewhere, because keeping it in my head all the time is starting to feel like it 's swallowing me.

Text Sample 113: POS Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score 12.00 – generic_gpt/t735_gpt.txt

I don't really know how to say this in a way that doesn't sound dramatic, but lately it feels like my life is happening behind glass. On paper I 'm not " alone. " I have coworkers, a couple of old friends I text sometimes, family chats that light up with memes and logistics. But I feel like I 'm always slightly out of phase with everyone else, like I 'm there physically but not really with them. I go days without using my voice for anything besides " thank you " at a checkout or " have a good one " at work. I 'll rehearse conversations in my head—what I 'd say if someone actually asked how I 'm doing, what I 'd tell a friend if I felt safe enough to be honest—and then the moment passes and I just default to " I 'm fine, you? " because I don't want to make things weird. The weird part is I 'm not even sure what I 'm missing anymore. I don't know if it 's a romantic partner, deeper friendships, or just one person who genuinely wants to know what my day looked like. I scroll through social media and see people posting group photos, trips, little inside jokes in the comments, and I feel like I 'm watching a life I somehow didn't qualify for. I try to reach out sometimes. I 'll send a message, suggest a plan, and then spend the whole time terrified I 'm being annoying or clingy. If they take a while to answer, I immediately assume I 've overstepped. If they say they 're busy, I tell myself they 're just being polite and don't really want to see me. It 's like my brain is determined to interpret everything in the most self-rejecting way possible. I 've also noticed how loneliness makes me smaller. I share less. I take up less space. I censor my interests because I don't want to be " too much. " Then I feel invisible and resentful, but it 's a situation I helped create by not showing up as myself. Nights are the worst. There 's this heavy silence that feels almost physical. I 'll lie there thinking about how, if I disappeared, it would take a while for anyone to notice in a concrete way. People would be " shocked " in the abstract, but day-to-day, not much would change. I don't really know what I want from posting this. Maybe I just needed to put it somewhere outside my own head for once.

Text Sample 114: POS Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score 11.00 – generic_gpt/t2608_gpt.txt

I don’t really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but lately it feels like I ’m living in spectator mode instead of actually participating in my own life. On paper, I ’m “ fine. ” I have a job, a place to live, I ’m not in immediate crisis. But I come home every day to an empty apartment, sit on the same spot on the couch, and scroll until my eyes hurt. Hours go by and I realize I haven’t said a single word out loud. Sometimes the only time I hear my own voice is when I ’m talking to myself or ordering coffee. I have acquaintances. People I can talk to at work, send memes to, maybe see once every month or two. But I don’t have that person I can text when something small but important happens. I don’t have anyone who ’ll notice if I go quiet for a few days. When I do meet people, the connection never seems to move past surface-level. It ’s like there ’s a glass wall between me and everyone else. What hurts the most is that I used to have close friends. Group chats that were constantly active, late-night calls, inside jokes. Over time people moved, got partners, got busy, and I somehow became the person you “ mean to catch up with sometime. ” I scroll through social media and see everyone getting married, having kids, going on trips with “ their people, ” and I ’m just … not in anyone ’s picture. I keep asking myself if this is my fault. Maybe I ’m too quiet, too awkward, too boring. Maybe I missed the window where people build their core group and now I ’m just orbiting on the outside. I try to put myself out there occasionally, but it feels forced and exhausting, and I come home feeling more alone than before. The hardest part is waking up and realizing there is no one who truly knows what ’s going on with me. If I disappeared from the internet and stopped showing up to work, I honestly don’t know how long it would take for anyone to really notice that something was wrong.

Text Sample 115: POS Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score 11.00 – generic_gpt/t1852_gpt.txt
I ’ve been feeling this really specific kind of loneliness lately that doesn’t quite fit into the usual “ no friends / no relationship ” boxes, even though those are part of it too. On paper, I ’m not completely alone. I have coworkers I get along with, a few old friends I text every now and then, family I can visit on holidays. But the weird thing is that I feel the most alone when I ’m actually around people. It ’s like there ’s a glass wall between me and everyone else. I can see them, hear them, laugh at their jokes, but it doesn’t feel like I ’m really with them. I notice it most in group conversations. People talk about their weekends, their partners, their kids, their trips, their plans. I chime in with something surface-level, they respond politely, and then the conversation moves on. No one is being mean. It ’s just like I ’m a background character in a movie, there to fill space so the main characters don’t look like they ’re talking to themselves. I ’m also realizing how much of my “ connection ” with people is logistical or functional. “ What time is the meeting? ” “ Can you send that file? ” “ Are you free Saturday? ” When I try to go deeper—say something honest like “ I ’ve been feeling pretty off lately”—it usually gets brushed past, or people say “ same ” and then switch topics. I get it ; everyone has their own stuff. But it reinforces this idea that my inner world isn’t really something anyone wants to linger on. What makes it worse is that I don’t even know how to fix it. I ’ve tried being more open, I ’ve tried initiating plans, I ’ve tried being the “ funny one ” or the “ good listener. ” I can play those roles, but none of them feel like me. And when I ’m finally alone again, I feel this heavy emptiness, like I spent all this energy performing and still came back with nothing. I keep thinking there must be some missing piece—some way other people naturally connect that I never learned. But I ’m starting to worry that this might just be how my life feels : surrounded, but separate.

Text Sample 116: POS Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score 11.00 – generic_gpt/t1709_gpt.txt
I ’ve been feeling this weird, heavy kind of loneliness lately that doesn’t really fit into any of the usual categories people talk about. I ’m not totally isolated. I work, I talk to coworkers, I answer messages in group chats. On paper I ’m “ connected. ” But it all feels like I ’m playing a role in other people ’s lives instead of actually being in them. Most of my interactions feel like background noise. Small talk, memes, work-related stuff, surface-level updates. I can go days without anyone asking me how I ’m really doing in a way that suggests they actually want to know. When I try to open up a bit, the conversation either gets redirected or brushed off with a joke. I end up feeling like I overshared, even if I only said one honest sentence. What makes it worse is that I used to have people I felt close to. Not many, but enough that I felt like I had a “ home base ” in the world. Over time, life just pulled us in different directions. People moved, got into serious relationships, became busy with kids or careers. We still “ keep in touch ” in the vaguest sense, but it ’s more like we ’re watching each other ’s lives from the outside rather than living anything together. I ’ve tried to meet new people, but I ’m at this age where everyone already seems to have their established circle. I always feel like the extra person tagging along, the one who can be there or not and it wouldn’t really change anything. I ’m present, but not essential. Replaceable. The part that really messes with me is how invisible this feels. From the outside, I probably look fine. I show up, I smile, I contribute to conversations. Nobody sees that I go home and just sit in the quiet, scrolling on my phone because I don’t know what else to do with myself. I keep wanting to send a message that just says, “ I feel really alone right now, ” but I don’t know who I ’d send it to, or what I ’d even want them to say back. There ’s this constant ache of wanting to be known, really known, and at the same time feeling like I ’ve forgotten how to let anyone that close. I ’m not sure if I ’ve built walls or if people just stopped trying to look over them. Maybe both. All I know is that I ’m tired of feeling like a side character in my own life.

Text Sample 117: POS Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score 11.00 – generic_gpt/t1446_gpt.txt
I don’t really know how to talk about this in my real life, so I ’m dumping it here instead. Lately I ’ve been feeling this weird mix of invisible and too visible at the same time. Invisible because no one really seems to notice when I go quiet, stop replying, or just disappear from group chats for days. Too visible because when I ’m actually around people, I feel hyper-aware of every word I say, like I ’m performing a version of myself that I don’t even like. I technically have “ people ” in my life—co-workers, a few old friends from school, family I see on holidays—but it all feels surface level. Lots of “ how ’s work? ” and “ what ’ve you been up to? ” and then the conversation dies if I try to say anything real. It ’s like everyone else is busy living their lives and I ’m this side character who occasionally walks through the background. What messes with my head is that from the outside I probably don’t look lonely. I show up to work, I reply to messages (eventually), I post the occasional meme. I know how to be “ fine ” in public. But then I go home, close the door, and it ’s just this heavy silence. I end up scrolling for hours, not because it ’s fun, but because it distracts me from how empty everything feels. The worst part is the feeling that I ’m hard to actually know. Not because I ’m deep or complicated, but because somewhere along the line I stopped believing people wanted to know me. So I started editing myself down—cutting out the parts that feel " too much, " too needy, too intense. Now I 'm left with this watered-down version that 's easier to tolerate but harder to connect with. I keep thinking, " If I disappeared, how long would it take anyone to actually notice? " And I don't mean that in a dramatic, self-harm way—it 's more like a practical question my brain won't stop asking. How many missed calls? How many unread messages? Would there even be any? I don't really have a point to this. I 'm just tired of feeling like I 'm watching my own life from the outside, like I 'm a guest in everyone else 's story and never the main character in my own.

Text Sample 118: POS Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score 11.00 – generic_gpt/t036_gpt.txt
I don't know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but lately it feels like I 'm disappearing from my own life. I 'm not completely isolated in the obvious sense. I have coworkers I chat with, a family group chat that occasionally pings, a couple of old friends I exchange memes with. On paper, it looks like I 'm " connected. " But none of it feels like it actually reaches me. It 's like I 'm standing behind glass, watching myself go through the motions of being a person among other people. The worst part is how ordinary everything looks from the outside. I go to work, I answer emails, I say " good weekend? " on Mondays and " have a good one " on Fridays. I laugh at the right times. But underneath, there 's this constant ache that nobody really knows me, and I 'm not sure I even remember how to let them. I used to have deeper friendships, but they faded slowly—different cities, different schedules, people pairing off and having kids. I can't point to a single moment where I " lost " anyone ; it was more like we all just stopped being central to each other 's lives. Now, every time I think about reaching out, I feel weirdly ashamed, like I 'm trying to resurrect something that quietly died years ago. I try to be proactive—join things, say yes to invitations when they appear—but conversations never seem to get past the surface. I leave social situations feeling more alone than before, because it reminds me how far I am from the kind of closeness I actually want. Most days I just come home, sit in the quiet, scroll through other people 's lives, and wonder when exactly mine started feeling like a waiting room.

Text Sample 119: POS Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score 10.00 – generic_gpt/t918_gpt.txt
I 'm in that weird place where I 'm not technically " alone, " but I feel completely disconnected anyway. On paper, I 'm fine. I have coworkers I get along with, a couple of old friends I text occasionally, family I see on holidays. If someone looked at my life from the outside, they 'd probably assume I 'm just another average person. But most days it feels like I 'm living behind glass, watching everything happen without really being part of it. I 'll go through an entire day at work and realize I haven't had a single conversation that went beyond surface-level stuff : " How was your weekend? " " Busy. " " You see that show? " " Yeah, it was good. " It 's like we 're all reading from a script and I can't remember my lines. I try to join in, but I feel like I 'm forcing myself into a rhythm that doesn't fit me. What really gets me is the evenings. I come home, make dinner, and then just…exist. I scroll through my phone, see people hanging out, going places, posting group photos with inside jokes in the captions. I 'm happy for them in theory, but it also hits this raw nerve, like I 'm the only person who never got invited to the part where life becomes shared. I 've tried to " fix " it in all the ways people suggest. Joined a club. Went to a meetup.

Chatted with strangers online. I can make small talk, I can be polite, I can smile and nod, but I never feel that click that tells me, " This person actually sees you. " I leave those interactions feeling more drained than before, like I 've just proven to myself again that I don't quite fit anywhere. I don't think I want a huge social circle or constant excitement. I just want one or two people I can message without overthinking it, someone who 'd notice if I went quiet for a few days and actually care enough to ask why. It 's strange how you can go weeks without anyone really asking how you 're doing in a way that means, " No, really. Tell me. " And after a while, you start wondering if maybe there isn't much to tell.

Text Sample 120: POS Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score 10.00 – generic_gpt/t580_gpt.txt
I don't really know how to talk about this in real life, so I 'm dumping it here. I 'm at this weird point where my life looks " fine " from the outside, but I feel like a ghost moving through it. I have coworkers I chat with, a family I text sometimes, a couple of old friends I send memes to. But none of it feels like connection. It 's like I 'm constantly in " small talk mode, " even with people I 've known for years. I can't remember the last time I felt genuinely understood by someone. Not " they listened to me talk, " but that feeling of, " oh, they actually get what I mean. " I always end up editing myself mid-sentence, making my thoughts shorter, lighter, less intense, so I don't come off as " too much. " And then I go home feeling like I spent the whole day pretending to be a watered-down version of myself. I try to reach out sometimes, but it always feels like I 'm intruding. I 'll type a message, stare at it, then delete it because I convince myself the other person is just being polite when they say we should talk more. When I do send it, I overanalyze every minute they don't respond, then feel stupid for caring so much. The worst part is the evenings. That moment when the distractions run out and it 's just me, the quiet, and this heavy sense that if I disappeared from everyone 's life, their routines wouldn't really change. Maybe they 'd be sad for a bit, but nothing would actually be different for them in the long run. For me, it would be everything. For them, it would be … a passing thought. I don't even know what I 'm hoping for by posting this. I guess I just wanted to put into words that specific kind of loneliness where you 're not technically alone, but you still feel completely unreachable.

4 NEG Dim 2

Text Sample 121: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -4.00 – generic_gpt/t634_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people but feel like a ghost. I have acquaintances, coworkers, even family around, yet I never feel actually known. Conversations stay surface-level ; I censor myself because I assume they 'd be bored or weirded out. I scroll, I lurk, I watch everyone else connect, and it just reinforces how replaceable and forgettable I seem to be.

Text Sample 122: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -3.00 – generic_gpt/t1628_gpt.txt
I 'm starting to think I 've forgotten how to be around people. I go through the motions at work, say the right small talk lines, then come home and just … vanish. My phone never buzzes unless it ’s a notification from an app. I scroll, I lurk, I watch other people ’s lives play out. I ’m surrounded by noise all day, but it feels like no one actually sees me at all.

Text Sample 123: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -3.00 – generic_gpt/t1939_gpt.txt
I ’m starting to feel like I ’ve become invisible in my own life. I go through the motions—work, errands, scrolling on my phone—but there ’s no real connection anywhere. Group chats are silent unless I message first, and even then replies feel obligatory. I ’m surrounded by people yet no one actually knows me. I miss being someone ’s first choice, or even a thought during the day. Mostly, I just feel forgettable.

Text Sample 124: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -3.00 – generic_gpt/t204_gpt.txt
I ’m starting to feel like I ’m disappearing in plain sight. I go through my day doing all the normal things—work, errands, small talk—but it all feels like acting. People know my name, but no one really knows me. I ’ll get home, unlock the door, and the silence hits like a wall. I scroll, I lurk, I watch other people ’s lives happen. I ’m surrounded by noise and still feel like I ’m on the outside of everything, pressed up against the glass.

Text Sample 125: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t657_gpt.txt
I ’m starting to feel like I ’ve become transparent to the world. I go through my days doing everything I ’m supposed to : work, small talk, errands, pretending I ’m “ fine. ” But when I come home and close the door, it ’s like I just … cease to exist for anyone else. My phone barely buzzes unless it ’s a notification from an app. Group chats move on without me. I scroll and scroll, watching other people ’s lives, and feel like I ’m pressed up against the glass of some party I was never invited to. What hurts most is that I ’m not completely isolated. I have acquaintances, coworkers, people who ’d say “ you ’re nice. ” But no one really knows me. No one notices when I disappear for a few days. I could delete every account I have and I ’m not sure a single person would ask why. I ’m surrounded by people and somehow still feel like a missing person.

Text Sample 126: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t760_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people but feel like I ’m on mute. I can talk, joke, work, but it all feels like acting. No one really knows me, and I ’m not sure I ’d know how to let them even if they tried. Nights are the worst ; everything goes quiet and it hits me how forgettable I probably am.

Text Sample 127: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t1564_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people but feel like a background character. Conversations stay shallow, friendships fade, and I ’m always the one reaching out. I ’m tired of feeling forgettable and quietly drifting through everyone ’s lives.

Text Sample 128: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t1529_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people but feel like I 'm behind glass. Conversations stay on the surface, and whenever I try to go deeper I feel like I 'm " too much " or just boring. Friends are more like occasional notifications than actual connections. I scroll, I lurk, I watch everyone else seeming to have lives that fit together. Mine feels like a puzzle with missing pieces, and I 'm starting to wonder if I 'm one of them.

Text Sample 129: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t641_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people but feel like background noise. Conversations stay shallow, friendships fade, and I 'm starting to wonder if I 'm just fundamentally forgettable.

Text Sample 130: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t1432_gpt.txt
I 'm starting to realize I don't actually know how to connect with people anymore. I can talk, I can be polite, I can even joke around, but it all feels like I 'm playing a character I don't really like. When conversations end, nobody seems curious about me, and I don't know if that 's because I 'm boring or because I never learned how to open up properly. Most days I just scroll, lurk, watch other people 's lives. I 'm surrounded by noise but feel like I 'm under glass, watching everyone else figure out something I keep missing.

Text Sample 131: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t1599_gpt.txt
I 'm starting to realize I 'm not just " alone, " I 'm actually lonely. My phone barely buzzes unless it 's some notification from an app. I scroll, lurk, watch everyone else 's lives move forward while mine feels stuck in neutral. I don't really have anyone I 'd feel comfortable texting just to say " hey, I 'm having a rough day. " I 'm surrounded by people at work, on the bus, in stores, but it all feels like being invisible in a crowded room.

Text Sample 132: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t1415_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people but feel like a background character in every room. Conversations stay shallow, like everyone else got a script I never received. I keep thinking I 'm forgettable. Even when I 'm invited somewhere, I feel like an accidental addition, not someone they 'd actually miss.

Text Sample 133: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t1629_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people but feel like a ghost. I have coworkers, acquaintances, even family nearby, yet everything feels surface-level. I don't know how to move conversations beyond small talk without seeming weird or needy. Nights are the worst ; I scroll, lurk, and pretend I 'm fine, but it 's like I 'm invisible in my own life.

Text Sample 134: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t1381_gpt.txt
I ’m in that weird place where I ’m surrounded by people but still feel completely alone. I have coworkers, acquaintances, people I can chat with about movies or work, but it never goes past surface level. I go home, shut the door, and it ’s like I vanish. My phone barely buzzes unless it ’s a notification from an app. What really gets me is feeling like I ’m always the one reaching out, initiating, asking to hang out, and when I stop, everything just…stops. It makes me wonder if anyone actually thinks of me when I ’m not right in front of them. I ’ve started talking less, even when I ’m with others, because I feel like I ’m just background noise. I miss feeling important to someone, like my absence would actually be noticed.

Text Sample 135: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t586_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people but feel like a background character. Conversations stay shallow, friendships fade, and I ’m always the one reaching out first. I ’m starting to wonder if I ’m just forgettable.

Text Sample 136: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t016_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people but feel like a ghost. I make small talk, laugh at the right moments, but no one actually knows me. When I try to open up, conversations slide back to surface stuff. I go home exhausted, replaying every word, wondering if I ’m just fundamentally unlikeable or forgettable.

Text Sample 137: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t522_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people and still feel like I ’m watching life through a window. I have acquaintances, coworkers, even family nearby, but everything feels surface-level. I don’t know how to move conversations past small talk without seeming weird or needy. Nights are the worst—just scrolling, lurking, feeling invisible, like everyone else got a manual for connection that I somehow missed.

Text Sample 138: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t940_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people but feel completely disconnected. Conversations feel scripted, like I ’m playing a role instead of being myself. I scroll, lurk, watch others live, but rarely reach out. It ’s like I ’m invisible even to the people who know my name.

Text Sample 139: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t1690_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people but feel completely disconnected. Conversations feel scripted, friendships feel shallow, and when I ’m finally alone, the silence just confirms how replaceable and unnoticed I really am.

Text Sample 140: NEG Dim 2 – generic_gpt – Score -2.00 – generic_gpt/t1684_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people but feel invisible. Conversations stay shallow, friendships fade, and I 'm starting to wonder if I 'm just fundamentally forgettable.

Text Sample 141: NEG Dim 2 – human – Score -1.00 – human/t418_human.txt
Does anyone talk to themselves outloud when they are alone....like to motivate themselves to brush their teeth, shower, do chores and errands? or sorta lull themselves to sleep? is this normal?

Text Sample 142: NEG Dim 2 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t2754_human.txt
I live in an apartment on the outskirts of San Antonio. I work from home and I go to school from. I 'm actually in heaven.

Text Sample 143: NEG Dim 2 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t183_human.txt
Good morning to everyone! It 's nice and warm today in coastal Virginia. Flowers blooming, trees leafy again, pollen everywhere 😁. I hope you have a beautiful day! Let me know if you 'd like to see a dog 💕

Text Sample 144: NEG Dim 2 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t931_human.txt
I know it sounds pathetic. But I just feel like my family just deals with me and no one actually likes me.

Text Sample 145: NEG Dim 2 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t2167_human.txt
I have one. It 's kind of cathartic. I would be curious to hear yours.

Text Sample 146: NEG Dim 2 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t2124_human.txt
Name one valid solution. There aren't any. Loneliness is only solved by connection. Everything else is a distraction to it.

Text Sample 147: NEG Dim 2 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t900_human.txt
They will never reach out. They will never miss me. I 'm nothing relevant to anybody :(It has always been like this since I was a child. I 'm always forgotten, ignored and tossed aside. No one would notice me unless they wanted to abuse me.

Text Sample 148: NEG Dim 2 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t1469_human.txt
I have some Friends but they seem tò not care, today i woke up with a High Fever and no One of them asked me how i was they Just said"hop On the game Bro". I feel so alone and sad about this.

Text Sample 149: NEG Dim 2 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t1473_human.txt
I given up trying to reach out to people I 'm finished.

Text Sample 150: NEG Dim 2 – human – Score 1.00 – human/t958_human.txt
I genuinely have gotten to the point where I just feel empty, I feel like I can never connect with anyone and I hate it. I have this overwhelming thought that I 'm a bad person and I deserve this, that I deserve to be alone and tired all the time. I don't know why I feel so depressed again after everything, my life is objectively looking better but I feel forgotten. I feel like I don't fit in anywhere and I don't know why.

Text Sample 151: NEG Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t418_gpt.txt
Does anyone else talk to themselves out loud when they 're alone? I literally narrate and motivate myself to brush my teeth, shower, do chores and errands, even to fall asleep. Is this actually normal?

Text Sample 152: NEG Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2311_gpt.txt
It 's strange how isolation can sneak into adult life even when we 're busy, working, surrounded by coworkers or people. I 've been thinking about that quiet, empty feeling underneath it all. When does loneliness show up most for you, and what does it feel like?

Text Sample 153: NEG Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t469_gpt.txt
First Christmas abroad, surrounded by strangers and lights, but I 've never felt more alone.

Text Sample 154: NEG Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t464_gpt.txt
I 'm so tired of people being rude when I reach out just to talk. No one is forcing you to reply to my message. You can ignore it, block me, whatever. But snapping at me? Seriously? Sorry my little notification " disappointed " you. I 'm just trying to connect, not ruin your day.

Text Sample 155: NEG Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2153_gpt.txt
I 'm always surrounded by people, yet I feel this crushing emptiness inside. I 've tried hobbies, socializing, distractions—nothing works. I 'm just sad and hollow.

Text Sample 156: NEG Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2673_gpt.txt
Hey, please add me on Discord, I really need friends and I 'm very friendly. My username is strun#9835. Please, please add me, I 'm begging you.

Text Sample 157: NEG Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2681_gpt.txt
Does anyone else reply instantly to messages, even when the other person took hours or days to respond?

Text Sample 158: NEG Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t937_gpt.txt
Sometimes I stare at the moon and wonder if it ever feels as lonely as we humans do.

Text Sample 159: NEG Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t602_gpt.txt
Feeling really lonely right now. Can someone please message me? I just need to genuinely talk about my problems.

Text Sample 160: NEG Dim 2 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t606_gpt.txt
I think I 've finally found a solution in robots. They 're getting so much better now, it actually feels hopeful. I 'm planning to get two of them, and honestly I 'm really excited about it.

5 POS Dim 3

Text Sample 161: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 5.00 – human/t197_human.txt
Last year I thought I could. I was getting promoted at my job, had a good amount of friends, a beautiful girl was interested in me, and I was finally getting my life on track. Then everything went to shit. The promotion never came cuz of high turnover. I started school so work and school together ruined my social life. A lot of my friends slowly lost touch with me. The girl I loved was in college on the other side of the country but was moving back near me soon, so I was excited to see her again and ask her out. But turns out she was just trying to fuck and when I told her that I liked her and thought she liked me, she simply responded that ' like ' is a strong word and she doesn't catch feelings for people. So I quit my job at the end of last year and lost my friends I had there. And I lost a girl that was everything to me because it turns out I was nothing to her. And I stopped working out because of my depression I fell into. I cut myself off from the world. Now I 'm trying to get it together which is terrifying. I got a new job which seems cool enough but the people there kinda suck. I ’m back to working out but I can’t lift anywhere near what I could a few months ago and my body is in deep pain. I ’m gonna go back to school in the summer. But no real friends besides a couple roommates. Not a great relationship with my family. A significant other seems laughable to me at this point. It just sucks because I wanted to die for so long and stopped caring. Now I ’m slowly trying to get my life together, but the pain is still there and there ’s no signs of it going away. No matter what I just get the feeling that I ’ll never be seen as worth anyone ’s time and not be good enough for anything I try to do in this world.

Text Sample 162: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 4.00 – human/t888_human.txt
All I have is hatred in my heart now, nothing but hate. I fucking hate a lot of people. Don’t try to tell me lightening up and being nicer is the answer because I genuinely tried that for many years and it did nothing except bring more issues. So I defaulted to my regular real self again. I ’ve been through so fucking much I don’t even really wanna be around anymore. I ’d rather die in my sleep osrs. Fuck god btw and fuck Jesus. Hypocritical pieces of shit. Good for nothing. I feel being alone for this long has finally taken its toll, and it feels good to be fucked up to people now. Making them feel small, shitting on everything they care about and love. Beating them on every verbal argument and making them look like the retard that they truly are, in front of everyone for everyone to see in person or on social media. I FUCKING HATE PEOPLE. I genuinely feel good after fucking their days up. The world can deal with this now.

Text Sample 163: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 4.00 – human/t1450_human.txt
15m here, after a long time of feeling like I would never find anyone worth my time, I did find someone, this was the first time I ’ve had the confidence to ask somebody out ever, so I did, and I was rejected, I took it really well at first, but after a while, I began to feel like nothings ever worth it. Dealing with my parent at home is abs the worst thing in the world cause the only thing my mother seems to do half the time is yell at me, and my siblings just fucking suck in general. On another note, while I have plenty of friend, most don’t even seem to be worth it, I will admit that I‘m a femboy, but that ’s only because al everyone I know makes fun of me over it and either calls me gay, a woman, or just a weirdo. I ’ll also admit that I have had small sips beer before, this little known fact is very important cause I have decided to steal a beer from my parent because I feel like nothings ever worth it, and that alcohol is already my only escape, I know that this is a horrible thought mentally, but this is all I have. Life just isn’t worth it 90 I ’ll probably come back tomorrow with the situation involving the beer, but yeah, I just can’t take this shit anymore

Text Sample 164: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 4.00 – human/t1793_human.txt
I don’t have anyone to say this, so just let me throw out everything. I ’m so fucking tired of everything and this life sucks tbh. I want to say my emotions out but idk what I feel and what my emotions are really. I feel so sad and empty everyday, I don’t feel like talking to anyone even my family and sibling and I feel like my soul is just dead and it ’s just there in my body. I don’t have any friends other than my workplace. And I don’t even trust them now cause they are just like other people right. I hangout with them but don't feel happy so I stopped that too. Even my dating life sucks, whoever I trust or love or whatever the fk I care about anyone, it 's just worthless. I 'm so done with life but idk what to do, so stuck that I don't even know my goals and my future. I have financial issues, overthinking issues, trust issues and just don't feel like I exist for myself anymore and I feel like this depression and anxiety will eat my brain someday. Tried everything to deal with this shit, good and bad things, even tried to believe god and worship him but end up awake all night making my mental health worse. I have tried therapy sessions like 4-5 times but it just doesn't help out. Idk what my emotions are and a therapist wants to know what makes feel sad. Like I JUST DO N'T KNOW. Idk what to do anymore in my life.

Text Sample 165: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t059_human.txt
my mom reads through all my texts right? that sounds normal. she also reads through my search history, also pretty normal. but you know what she also does? LOOKS THROUGH MY FUCKING NOTES AND GOOGLE DOCS! LIKE WHAT SHIT DO YOU THINK I WOULD BE HIDING IN THERE? MY GOOGLE DOCS AND SLIDES ARE CONNECTED TO MY SCHOOL ACCOUT (which is also really nosy btw) AND SHE KNOWS IT! IF SHE LOOKS THROUGH THOSE THEN SHE PROBABLY LOOKS THROUGH LIKE EVERYTHING ON MY PHONE TOO! but like seriously what the fuck. You think I 'm gonna like hide all my secrets about like my " boyfriend " (she doesnt know im bi) and shit on my FUCKING NOTES? MIGHT AS WELL LOOK THROUGH EVERYTHING I HAVE IF YOUR GONNA BE THAT NOSY. LIKE JESUS CHRIST WHAT THE FUCK WOMAN YOU HAVE ISSUES. IM FUCKING 16 MOM STOP WITH THE HANDHOLDING!!! sorry im just not in a good relationship with my mom right now and the only way I can cope with her is ranting about random shit she does

Text Sample 166: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t1033_human.txt
I learned at an embarrassing age that"we should hang out"does NOT mean they want to hang out. I don't understand this. There are pleasantries with people who are strangers/you don't know very well, but I don't understand when people say this specifically. Honestly it bothers me, because not only do they not wanna hang out, in many cases they get irritated at you for trying to make plans. I thought I had this all figured out in my head that when someone says that to you during a conversation, they don't mean that. But what I 've just had happen is an old friends hit ME up and then say oh I miss you we should hang out. But then when I say oh that 's great I 'm free next Saturday, suddenly I 'm weird??? Literally after I said that the next thing they said was a message that included a lot of"oh ummm"and"lol". Like wtf?? Is this not how conversations go? Like why was I meant to feel weird about this?? It 's one thing if someone says that to you if you randomly run into them in a store but this person initiated contact with me??? Like excuse me for thinking YOU contacting ME and saying to hang out makese think you wanna hang out. I 'm just venting because this shit happens to me and I don't have any friends I talk to on a regular basis. I don't understand what I 'm missing. I just feel like giving up and I 've isolated myself so much because I just can't take this

Text Sample 167: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t038_human.txt
All my friends are too busy for me. N they end up ghosting me. I ’m not sure if they just hate me to be honest. Ever since I moved, I lost all the people who even bothered to give me the time of day. I ’m fucking 15 for God ’s sake. I should have a social life... I ’m trying to make friends here ig. If you like Harry Potter (Fuck JK Rowling though- transphobic mongrel bitch,) playing Stardew Valley (if you wanna do a joint farm that ’d be cool, Vulture Culture, Wilbur Soot, or generally anything n just are chill, then feel free to message ig. Thanks for reading anyways!

Text Sample 168: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t033_human.txt
in 2019 my place of work announced they were closing the place where i am employed. i been looking for new work ever since. cant find shit. had ANOTHr interview last monday. and Got a rejection email late last night. its my 10th interview. 10th rejection. out of nearly 300 applications. i expect the last of us will be let go b the end of this year so my time is almost up i bought 3 bottles of liquor dont know why. just dcrank one and a half of them. so yea im drunk as the fukin worthless fuck i am i think im broken. there must be something wrong with me. otherwise i would be abl to find work wouldnt i? feeling drunk is the best ive felt since i found out im losing my job. ii dont wanna have to sober up. i hate my llife, i hate myself. i hate waking up in the morning because it means i dint die in my sleep. i still have 1 and a half bottles left. i honesly dont know if ill be able to stop myself from just drinking it all tonight and im not sure i care if i can or not

Text Sample 169: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t036_human.txt
Tbh when I started high school, I never thought I ’d be where I ’m at right now (at least socially). Three years and one relationship later though, I ’ve successfully become an introvert and it fucking sucks. I miss having friends to talk with & play games with. I miss having people who reach out to me first. I ’m always the one who makes plans & reaches out to others first. Shit just makes me feel so lonely. After me and my ex broke up, and quarantine hit, i realized just how much i depended on her for socializing. She was the only person i ’d really talk to every day & hang out with at school. Afterwards, i did have people that i ’d hang out with but once quarantine hit, we all just drifted apart. I miss having those close relationships with others. The ones where you could tell the other person all you troubles n shit. But it is what it is I guess. Video games just aren’t the same by yourself. Youtube starts to become repetitive. I just wish I could have friendships like I did back in middle school. Growing up really does suck once all this starts happenin to ya! :) I just hope that shit gets better in university. I ’m thankful that I have more time to focus on grades but at times, it feels like that ’s all I focus on & I never get to socialize but oh well. It felt good to vent out my feelings like this tbh. Thank you if you cared to read till here. I ’m excited to see what the future holds tbh, hopefully won’t be as lonely as right now!

Text Sample 170: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t015_human.txt
I thought Star Wars were just films I loved, but then I started listening to my heart, studying the world and gave myself over to the Force. Now, I am at peace and only wish to share what the Force has taught me, with others who are lost as I was. Do not think I am saying worship Star Wars, I am a Jedi, not a lightsaber nerd, Jedi comes from Jidaigeki which is a word for Japanese Historical Stories, so Jedi means knowledge of history. A Jedi is the keeper of peace and history, we use words, ideas, and knowledge, and are led to these things by the force. I cannot take credit for what I know, because I have faith in the Force, which some call intuition or instinct, but I know I am being led by something far greater than myself. If I was crazy, I would be living a worse life, not a better one. The one thing that does make me feel a little crazy, is that people would rather see my good intentions as crazy or self-promotion, instead of realizing, there are far better ways to get famous, why would I say such things unless I believed them? Religion never worked for me, and then it hit me, and all the knowledge from my childhood fantasies, synced up with what I know about real religions, and real spirituality, if these concepts and labels, help me understand something that is both improving my life, and also, enables me to find a true faith that I never knew I could have, how is this wrong or crazy? I guess, you have to be out on a ledge, for a really long time, before you start becoming grateful for the things that make you realize, what the fuck am I doing on a Ledge, I got an Xbox and Playstation, I got skills and talents, life is not so bad, why am I not finding a way to be happy? The Darkside does not want us to be happy, and it makes us lazy, it lies to us, distorts the truth, and makes us hate ourselves, it makes us long for release from suffering, when we can end our own suffering through the choice to find happiness. The Force is my bliss, if you want to learn more about it please watch this video https://youtu.be/R2HmO2piTGo

Text Sample 171: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t903_human.txt
Okay so first ; my English is not so good, it ’s not my first language. So HEY! My name is Linus (25M) and I am a very shy person and I have a stutter so it ’s hard to make friends or even have a girlfriend, so my life is not so great I am a patient with chronic kidney disease (CKD) and since I got that diagnosis I closed up completely I thought I was the only one who had that. So I life in Belgium, I work in a nursing home I talk with everyone there but it ’s a different talking voice, but once I am done I am alone. After my work I go sometimes to the gym or I read books or play video games, it ’s hard to make friends outside and in my head so I hope that ’s gonna change sometimes I really hope so. So thanks for looking at my post.

Text Sample 172: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t2126_human.txt
I ’m started getting tired to induldge my mom ’s ignorant treatment toward me like i am delusional who enjoy being labeled as”depressed person”. When in reality, i felt so empty and tired to play along the game of”acting like everything is fine amd shit can be treated by mama ’s silly tape-on project that she wanna show her daughter like a proud girl and when to get a compliment”. I felt shitty at work from people and stress that i want it to just put me down like a dog. I ’m depressed at hell how i was insulted at work and have to put on poker face to pretend that all is fine, i enjoy being doormat. I fucking tired now....

Text Sample 173: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t576_human.txt

I just want my daddy, I want to cry. I feel so so alone, I hate existing and dealing with this shit daily and the holidays are awful fucking reminders. I have to go visit extended family four hours away tomorrow for thanksgiving and I do NOT want to be around family. I do not want to socialize. I do not want to have a conversation. I know I 'm just going to be there silently moping and miserable and trying to"subtly"exclude myself from my family until eventually my extended family wonder what 's wrong with me and my parents are embarrassed and disappointed by their miserable daughter. I do not want to go but I know if I told my parents they would be hurt and I 'd have to go anyway, so I 've just kept my mouth shut and do whatever they ask of me. I just want to lay here and cry. I want to be cuddled, and held, and told that everything is alright and know that I have someone to love and who loves me. I 'm so desperately lonely, I don't want to wake up to a fucking holiday tomorrow. And then after that I 'm going to spend more of the money I need to save to move out on holiday gifts and junk for myself. I need a job, I have no job, and I have no interest in a career, but I need to LEAVE. I don't want to live here!! I 'm so unhappy!!! I need to leave and be alone and be elsewhere to be unhappy by myself. Everything sucks, I 'm so hateful and yet I 'm so fucking sad I just wanted a future worth living for with my ex but I don't have that, it 's always just a facade I don't want to keep doing this

Text Sample 174: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t2161_human.txt
I constantly feel so cursed and absolutely fucked by my trauma and the people and things that caused it. I feel like I can never be too honest. I can give people general run downs and they apologize, sympathize, be kind, and thats fantastic! But I can't to into detail, I can't talk about how I really truly feel about it, it makes people too uncomfortable. They are a supportive network in a regular way and I appreciate it, but sometimes it makes me feel really alone that they cant be there for me in the way I need, and it sucks because I also know it isn't their fault, but it doesnt make it feel any less bad. I feel like im never going to be able to achieve a ' real ' connection with anybody. I have close friends but it feels like theres cling film between us. I think its my own fault though, I have a hard time with the idea that someone could like me as much as I like them, so I think I dont really let people in. I want to be better so bad. Ive been trying really hard and I know progress takes a while but sometimes I am just so fucking angry, or alone, miserable, bitter, empty.

Text Sample 175: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t623_human.txt
i, 19, am going through it rn. its like a part of my soul was stripped away from the endless amount of work, unnecessary and necessary stress, and i just lost my gf. now i know i sound a bit pissy about my life to the whole wide world, but i genuinely don't know how to vent this anger and isolation to any of my peers or family due to them moving on to greater endeavors while im sitting down looking at what i could 've been. i also know that some people have it worse than me but i don't know if i can accept my failure and move on cause its so damn difficult. the rant that im currently writing is an extension of my escapism. so if anyone pops by to look at this, may you please share your tips on how to combat this hopeless feeling? thanks

Text Sample 176: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t587_human.txt
i just wanna live like a normal person.. why cant i have that.. im always miserable.. Hello everyone.. i hope some take the time to read this i just need to be heard. have you ever felt like you ’ve been running your whole life?.. trying not to be miserable but really its just the way things will always be. im ending my life, tonight :)) i grew up with no parents to care for me, my dad died when i was a baby bcs he overdosed with drugs and my mom was also an addict but decided to keep me … all throughout my childhood my mom beat me a week wont pass by where i wont get beaten to sleep. thats just how things were. the beating only stopped when i turned 16 bcs i decided to work, i was always not at home so my mom couldn’t do it anymore.. we rent a small apartment so eversince ive worked ive been paying that. i pay for my schooling too ever since 16 … im 18 now but you know what makes this worse? im in fucking debt … my mom used my name to buy drugs 🙂 so now i owe money to people idk, ive been hiding for a few months now bcs theyre on the hunt for me to pay it.. im scared for my life and idk what to do.. they always come and beat me when they spot me.. i dont even have a friend or anything bcs my only friend got sick of it.. i just wanna end it all.. i just wanna kms.. im so depressed.. what im feeling and experiencing rn is something i wouldn’t wish on anyone.. if ure gonna have children, please be responsible enough to actually take care of them … all ive wanted my entire life is to have stable education and a home where i felt safe.. but i couldnt have that i got the worst of the opposite. idk what to do anymore, by the time ive posted this im probably already kms.. ty for listening … atleast someone did for the first time ….

Text Sample 177: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t667_human.txt
I sat up yesterday and cried for a solid 2 hours because of how lonely i felt it really felt like my heart was shattering and im scared of myself i just want to be happy i dont know how to fix it like ive had relationships but i have been dumped in pretty much all of them i don’t understand what im doing wrong is my care and love not enough im trying my best to be a great like guy and then I just get dumped. i don’t even know anymore if someone wants to text my dms are open if you wanna vent or just talk for the sake of talking have a good day everyone

Text Sample 178: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t1524_human.txt
Sometimes lonliness is created from your own victim attitude. It will never feel good to see yourself as punished or unfairly treated compared to others. It will not attract new friends or a partner. It will not give you energy. It will not give you an improved mood. It will not make a single positive difference or impact on your life. Some people assume if you ’re struggling with mental illness or physical injuries, you must pity yourself, and I ’m here to let you all know that ’s a myth. Self pity is seperate from disability, it ’s a character trait. Anyone can have it anyone can also not have it. A billionaire can sit and feel sorry for himself when the 10k luxury dish wasn’t good enough, while a homeless person walking the streets in a snow storm is smiling cause someone let him pet their dog. The billionaire can have all he wants and still feels miserable because he has a victim mindset. The homeless person have very few things in life but he appreciate and embrace every minor detail. So. I wanna talk from the view of taking responsibility. Life is unfair. We all gotta work with what we got. If I ’m unable to run, I walk to get where I want. If I ’m unable to walk, I use crutches to get where I want. If I ’m unable to stand, I use a wheelchair to get where I want. You get the picture. Lonliness feeds on people who pity themselves so if you do pity yourself, you ’re welcoming more lonliness. With this said. Have a great weekend, treat yourself, be kind to yourself and dare to hold yourself accountable for your happiness, in there foremost - > 🧠 💝

Text Sample 179: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t115_human.txt
Heyo, Canadian female here. I have a such a hard time keeping friend cause I ’m not great at convos. I just want someone or a few people that can look past that and still wanna be friends 🫶 I ’m open to who ever

Text Sample 180: POS Dim 3 – human – Score 3.00 – human/t820_human.txt
M21 hikikomori/neet incel low IQ ugly half indian openly hated loser with 2/3 of my life a mindfuck regret. I wish I had succeeded in something, any subject, endeavour. I ’m starving myself and I feel dumber with the lack of nutrition. Initially scared my brain will melt to cultivate water for my other organs but fuck this penile shit world. Idk I just wish I was smart enough, handsome enough, a woman or a marginalized figure worthy of worship and admiration. My family openly detests me and my younger sister is turning 16 this year. I can’t live with myself knowing she ’s the better sibling and way smarter than me..I watched cartoons with her when she was a toddler. Why does she get to be liked and pampered?! I wish these people who hate me would openly mock me or ridicule me but they just ignore me but I would also hate that?? Idk I wish I could die a slow painful death so I feel some accomplishment. I hate this empty canvas of half-baked personal li developments. I wish I could have been the Judas to betray the savior of the life loving masochists. I wish people would call me”Sir!”or ironically”Uncle”. Having no one sucks. That ’s what my nephew told me recently”You have no one left. Behave yourself”. Who does he think he is? But when he complains about his life my relatives give a fuck?! I fucking hate this life, realm of consciousness. My death will be my biggest win! I want to die feeling my organs eating in on itself! My brain turn into goo! I just hope someone goes to my funeral. I want them to stand quiet around my grave. Fuck

Text Sample 181: POS Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 2.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2331
I ’ve never kissed a guy, and honestly, I ’m not exactly sad about it. It ’s not like I ’ve never had the chance either – I ’ve turned down a few opportunities, and later it turned out those guys were not great people. So I don’t regret saying no. I have this friend I ’ve known for a long time, she ’s always been introverted too. She had some experience in college and later lost her virginity to a coworker. He moved away afterward, and she was really depressed and heartbroken. It was rough to see her go through that. Now, though, she keeps bringing up the fact that I ’ve never kissed anyone. She ’ll say things like, “ We should go out so you can finally have your first kiss, ” like it ’s some embarrassing problem that needs to be fixed. Every time she says it, it stings. It feels like she ’s treating my lack of experience as something shameful, like I ’m broken or behind. It also feels like she ’s implying that having standards is wrong, or that nobody has ever wanted me. I don’t see it that way – I just don’t want my first experiences to be with people who don’t respect me or who are clearly wrong for me. I ’m not sure how to handle her comments without causing drama, but they really hurt.

Text Sample 182: POS Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 2.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t074_
I ’m bisexual with parents who are super homophobic, and it just makes everything feel impossible. I ’ve got this huge crush on a straight girl, my life just sucks. I ’m always crying alone at 2:30 a.m. I honestly hate my family. Anyway, thanks for coming to my TED talk.

Text Sample 183: POS Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 2.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t431_
Feeling pretty low after New Year ’s. I ’m 31 and decided I ’m gonna stop drinking for a while because it ’s just making me more depressed. I ’ve felt lonely for a long time, even though I ’m usually pretty social. Right now I ’m just … alone, and it sucks. A few years ago I met this woman (she ’s 26 now) through a friend on Discord. We ’ve met in person and I ’ve had a crush on her pretty much since then. Recently she broke up with her boyfriend and after that we started talking a lot more. She ’s told me she loves me multiple times and even said it on a call on New Year ’s Eve. It felt really sincere, but I have no idea if she means it in a romantic way or just as a close friend. Lately she ’s been more withdrawn and we ’ve been talking less. I don’t know if she ’s overwhelmed, changed her mind, or just needs space after her breakup. I ’m scared of pushing her away if I ask directly, but it ’s messing with my head not knowing where I stand. I ’m not sure what to do. Should I tell her how I feel? Give her space? Has anyone been in a similar situation?

Text Sample 184: POS Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 2.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t667_
I just spent the last two hours crying and I honestly feel like my heart is breaking. I ’m so lonely it scares me, and I ’m starting to be afraid of myself and where my mind is going. I don’t know how to become happy or how to fix any of this. I ’ve had relationships before, but I ’ve been dumped in almost all of them. I keep wondering what I ’m doing wrong. I care, I love, I try to be a great guy, but it never seems to be enough. The constant rejection just leaves me confused and hurt. If anyone wants to vent or just talk, my DMs are open. I hope you ’re all having as good a day as possible.

Text Sample 185: POS Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1013
I live in a big city, surrounded by people, but somehow I still feel completely alone. Most social stuff here seems to revolve around drinking, and I don’t drink anymore. I used to self-medicate a lot with alcohol and drugs just to get through the days and to feel like I could connect with people. I ’ve been sober from alcohol for almost three years now, and I quit cannabis a few weeks ago. Without those crutches, it feels like everything I pushed down for years is rushing to the surface. I cry a lot, I barely sleep, and I keep thinking about how much time I spent just coping instead of actually building a life or real connections. I ’m not sure what I ’m looking for, but I guess I ’m wondering if anyone else has gone through something like this. Thanks for reading. Peace and love to all of you.

Text Sample 186: POS Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2630

I ’ve pretty much been a loner for as long as I can remember. A lot of that comes from some stuff that happened when I was a kid that kind of rewired how I move through the world. I got close to my siblings instead, especially my older sister – she ’s probably the one person who really “ gets ” me without me needing to explain much. What ’s funny is, from the outside, I don’t look lonely at all. I actually have a lot of friends, and people generally treat me with kindness. I know I ’m loved and cared for. But I still gravitate toward being on my own. Give me my music, my movies, my creative gear, and I ’m honestly content. I ’m very empathetic and intuitive, which sounds nice on paper, but it means I absorb everything around me – moods, tension, unspoken things. It can get overwhelming. Keeping some distance is my way of protecting my own peace, and weirdly, the peace of the people I love too. If I ’m drained or overstimulated, I ’m not much good to anyone. My connections are still real and deep. I ’d go to great lengths for the people I care about and I don’t expect anything back. I just also really value my space. I prefer being the one who visits instead of having people in my space, and most people in my life have learned to respect that I just need a lot of solitude.

Text Sample 187: POS Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2631

Hey, I just joined this subreddit and already feel weirdly relieved seeing people I can relate to. I ’m curious : what are your hobbies? I feel like I kinda suck at hobbies. Mostly I just watch TV series or movies and do a bit of mobile photography. What do you all enjoy doing?

Text Sample 188: POS Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1053

I feel so lonely most days that it physically hurts. I rarely leave the house anymore. I miss having close, consistent connections so much it ’s like this constant ache in the background of everything I do. The weird thing is, I don’t actually struggle to connect with people at first. I can talk, I can relate, I can open up. But what I really want is someone who is emotionally present, every day. Someone who actually checks in : a “ good morning ” message, a “ how was your day? ” at night. Just that steady sense that someone out there genuinely cares and is thinking about me. People often misjudge me and think I ’m just sexually driven or “ chasing women, ” and it honestly hurts. I ’m not out here looking for hookups. I ’m craving affection. I ’d be happy with a close, loving bond with anyone, man or woman, even though I ’m straight. I just want that warmth, that emotional closeness, that feeling of being held in someone ’s mind and heart. And I ’d give that affection back, fully. What frustrates me is how many people say they ’re “ too busy ” to connect, but then spend hours arguing with strangers online. It feels like people don’t really want to build genuine connections anymore. As a sensitive person, that reality hits me especially hard. I just want someone who actually wants that too, and I ’m starting to wonder if that ’s asking for too much in today ’s world.

Text Sample 189: POS Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2624

I feel like I did this to myself, and now it ’s hitting me all at once. Over the last few years I slowly pulled away from everyone. I left friend groups, stopped going out, deleted all my social media, and even removed people from my contacts. At the time I really believed I preferred being alone, that I didn't need anyone. Now I 'm looking around and realizing I basically have no one who actually cares about me anymore. It 's like I erased myself from other people 's lives. I regret it a lot … but there 's also this weird part of me that 's grateful. The people who truly cared tried for a while, and their efforts kind of revealed who actually gave a damn. It just sucks that I pushed them away too.

Text Sample 190: POS Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score 1.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2612
I feel most content when it 's just me and my pets. People, on the other hand, drain me and cause so much mental anguish and exhaustion. Every relationship I 've had has ended up making me miserable, and I honestly don't understand why I 'm like this. I know it 's probably not healthy to feel this way, but I don't know how to change it. Does anyone else feel like they 're only truly okay when they 're alone?

Text Sample 191: POS Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score 1.00 – generic_gpt/t1112_gpt.txt
I 'm starting to feel like I 'm fading out of other people 's lives without anyone really noticing. I have acquaintances, group chats, coworkers, but no one I 'd call at 2 a.m. if something went wrong. Most days I don't speak out loud beyond " thanks " at a checkout. When I 'm invited somewhere, I feel like a last-minute filler, not someone anyone is genuinely excited to see. What messes with me is how replaceable I feel. If I disappeared from social media, I don't know who would actually reach out and ask if I 'm okay, or even realize I 'm gone.

Text Sample 192: POS Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score 1.00 – generic_gpt/t1107_gpt.txt
I 've started to notice how quiet my life actually is. I go entire weekends without speaking out loud, except to say " thanks " to a delivery driver. My phone lights up only with notifications from apps, never from people. I scroll through group photos of others and feel like I 'm watching a world I somehow missed the entrance to. When coworkers talk about their plans, I nod along and pretend I 'm busy too. I 'm not. I just go home, sit in my room, and try to make the silence feel less heavy. It never really works.

Text Sample 193: POS Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score 1.00 – generic_gpt/t1048_gpt.txt
I don't really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but I feel like I 'm slowly disappearing from everyone 's life, including my own. On paper I 'm " fine. " I have a job, I reply to emails, I show up to meetings, I answer " not bad, you? " when people ask how I 'm doing. I even laugh at the right moments. But it all feels like I 'm acting a version of myself that doesn't actually exist anymore. When the day 's over and I 'm back home, it 's just this heavy quiet that feels louder than any noise. I have people I could technically message. Old friends, acquaintances, a family group chat. But every time I go to type something, I overthink it. " Is this weird to send after so long? " " Am I bothering them? " " Do they even think about me? " So I end up deleting the message and scrolling through apps instead, watching other people 's lives move forward while mine feels like it 's stuck on pause. What makes it worse is that I can't point to a single big event that caused this. It 's like a slow erosion. One person moves away, another gets into a serious relationship, someone else has kids, and suddenly group chats go quiet, plans get postponed indefinitely, and I 'm the one who somehow slipped through the cracks. I 'm not angry at anyone. I just feel … left behind. I 've also started noticing how I censor myself when I do interact with people. I keep everything surface-level because I 'm afraid that if I show how lonely I actually am, it 'll push them away. So I nod, smile, say " things are busy, " and then go home and lie awake, scrolling, staring at the ceiling, feeling this ache in my chest that I can't really justify to anyone. The worst part is how it messes with my sense of self-worth. When no one really knows you, it starts to feel like there 's nothing worth knowing. Like if I vanished, people would be sad for a bit and then just … adjust. And I don't know how to climb out of that mindset when most days I barely have the energy to try.

Text Sample 194: POS Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score 1.00 – generic_gpt/t1416_gpt.txt
I 've been feeling like a background character in my own life lately. My days are technically " busy " : work, commute, chores, scrolling, sleep. But there 's no real connection in any of it. I talk to coworkers, I answer emails, I say " have a good one " to cashiers, but it all feels like static. No one really knows me, and I 'm not sure anyone wants to. What messes with my head is that, from the outside, I probably look fine. I show up, I crack jokes, I reply in group chats sometimes. Then I go home and realize I don't actually have anyone I can text just to say, " Today sucked, can I vent? " I keep thinking I should reach out more, join something, be " braver. " But there 's this heavy, tired part of me that whispers it won't matter, that I 'll still feel like this even in a room full of people.

Text Sample 195: POS Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score 1.00 – generic_gpt/t1635_gpt.txt
I don't really know how to say this without sounding dramatic, but I feel like I 'm disappearing from my own life. I talk to people every day—coworkers, the barista, neighbors in the hallway—but it 's all surface-level. Jokes, small talk, " How was your weekend? " with answers nobody really cares about. I can go days without anyone asking me a genuine question. When I try to open up even a little, the conversation just … slides away, like I said something inconvenient. What messes with my head is that, on paper, I 'm " fine. " I have a job, a place to live, no huge crisis. But I come home to silence, eat alone, scroll through feeds full of people doing things with friends, partners, family. I 'm just a spectator. It 's like being locked behind glass, watching everyone else live. I don't know how to fix it. I 'm not great at initiating plans, and when I do, people are " busy " or they reschedule and forget. After a while, you stop trying because the rejection—even the soft, polite kind—builds up. Then the voice in your head starts saying, " Maybe you 're just not someone people keep around. " Anyway, I just needed to put this somewhere. It feels weird that a bunch of strangers online might know me better than anyone in my real life.

Text Sample 196: POS Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score 1.00 – generic_gpt/t599_gpt.txt

I don’t really know how to describe this feeling except that it ’s like being a ghost in my own life. I ’m surrounded by people at work, I reply to messages, I even crack jokes, but there ’s this constant sense that none of it “ lands ” anywhere. Like I could disappear and it would just be a minor scheduling inconvenience. I ’ve tried to be more open, to hint that I ’m not doing great, but it always feels like I ’m forcing vulnerability into conversations that weren’t built to hold it. People say, “ You can always talk to me, ” but when I actually do, I can see their eyes drift, or the responses get shorter after a while. What scares me most is how normal this has started to feel. The silence when I put my phone down. Eating alone and not even bothering with music anymore. It ’s like I ’m slowly adjusting to the idea that this might just be it.

Text Sample 197: POS Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score 1.00 – generic_gpt/t512_gpt.txt
I don’t really know how to explain this without sounding dramatic, but I feel like I ’m slowly disappearing from my own life. On paper, I ’m “ fine. ” I have a job, I reply to work messages, I say “ hey ” to coworkers, I like some memes in group chats. But none of it feels like it actually connects to me. It ’s like I ’m playing an NPC version of myself that knows the right lines but doesn’t feel anything behind them. I don’t have anyone I can message just to say “ today sucked ” without feeling like I ’m being a burden. The people I used to be close to moved on, got partners, got busier, or just drifted away. I keep replaying old conversations in my head, wondering when exactly I became the person no one thinks to invite. I try to “ put myself out there ” sometimes—join a Discord, comment in a group, go to a meetup—but it always feels like everyone already has their circles. I ’m the extra chair at the table that no one really needs. People are polite, but it never goes deeper. I leave feeling more alone than before I went. The worst part is how quiet everything gets at night. No notifications, no one who might randomly call. Just me, my thoughts, and this constant sense that I could vanish and it would only show up as a small inconvenience on someone ’s schedule, if at all. I don’t even know what I ’m looking for writing this. I just wanted to put it somewhere that isn’t only in my head.

Text Sample 198: POS Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score 1.00 – generic_gpt/t466_gpt.txt
I don’t really know how to explain this to people in my life, so I ’m dumping it here instead. I ’m not “ isolated ” in the obvious way. I have coworkers, a couple of old friends I still text sometimes, family group chats that light up on holidays. On paper it looks like I ’m connected. But I feel like I ’m living behind glass. I can see everyone, hear them, even laugh with them, but I can’t actually reach them. Most of my days are a loop : wake up, work, come home, scroll, sleep. I ’ll go the entire day without anyone saying my name out loud unless it ’s for something practical. No one really asks follow-up questions when I say I ’m “ tired ” or “ fine. ” I ’ve started to realize how easy it is to disappear without actually going anywhere. What really messes with me is that I don’t know how to fix it. I ’m not great at small talk, and when I do get invited somewhere I feel like a guest actor in other people ’s lives. I ’m there, but I ’m not part of the main story. I watch groups who clearly have shared history, inside jokes, that ease with each other, and I feel like I ’m pressing my face up against a window. I keep thinking about how long it ’s been since someone really knew what was going on with me. Not the surface-level stuff, but the actual fears, the random thoughts, the things I care about. I can’t tell if I ’ve become boring, or if I just never learned how to let people see anything real without feeling like

I ’m burdening them. Anyway, that ’s where I ’m at.

Text Sample 199: POS Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score 1.00 – generic_gpt/t051_gpt.txt
Everyone thinks I ’m “ doing great ” because I have a job, a place, and hobbies, but most days I don’t talk to anyone meaningfully. It feels like I ’m disappearing in plain sight.

Text Sample 200: POS Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score 1.00 – generic_gpt/t2003_gpt.txt
I ’ve been feeling like a background character in my own life lately. I go through the motions—work, commute, cook, sleep—but I don’t really talk to anyone beyond “ hey ” and “ thanks. ” Even when I ’m around people, I feel like I ’m behind glass, watching everyone else connect while I ’m stuck on mute. I ’ve tried joining group chats and hobbies, but I always end up feeling like the extra person no one would really miss if I stopped showing up. It ’s getting harder to remember what it feels like to be genuinely known by someone, not just recognized. I miss being on someone ’s mind without having to initiate every conversation.

6 NEG Dim 3

Text Sample 201: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -7.00 – generic_gpt/t1217_gpt.txt
I ’ve been feeling this strange mix of invisible and exposed lately, like I ’m walking around with “ alone ” written on my forehead but no one actually sees it. On paper, I ’m not isolated. I have coworkers, a couple of old friends I text sometimes, family I talk to in group chats. But everything feels surface-level, like I ’m playing a role in conversations instead of actually being there. I can be in a room full of people and still feel like a ghost hovering around the edges. What hits hardest is the lack of being known. No one really knows what my days are like, what I ’m afraid of, what I ’m hoping for. I don’t even know who I ’d call if something genuinely good or genuinely bad happened. I ’d probably just sit with it alone, scroll my phone, maybe type something out and delete it. I ’ve tried to “ put myself out there ” like everyone says—joined a couple of online communities, tried small talk at work, went to a meetup once. I always end up feeling like an outsider, like everyone else got a manual on how to connect that I somehow missed. The worst part is how it starts to feel like a personality trait instead of a situation. Like “ lonely ” is just who I am now. It ’s exhausting pretending it doesn’t bother me, then coming home to the quiet and realizing how loud the emptiness actually is.

Text Sample 202: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -6.00 – generic_gpt/t744_gpt.txt
I ’ve been feeling this weird mix of invisible and too exposed at the same time. On paper, I ’m not “ alone. ” I have coworkers, a few old friends I text every now and then, family chats that light up my phone. But none of it feels like it really touches me. It ’s like I ’m standing behind glass watching my own life happen. I go through the motions : work, gym, scrolling, sleep. I laugh at the right times, make small talk, answer " I 'm good, you? " without thinking. Then I get home, close the door, and it hits me how quiet everything is. Not just the room—my life. There 's no one who really expects me, no one I can send a random thought to without overthinking if I 'm being annoying. What bothers me most is how replaceable I feel. If I stopped showing up, I think people would notice for a bit, then just … adjust. I don't feel like I 'm anyone 's first choice, or even second. More like background noise. I 've tried joining clubs, going to events, talking more. It always feels shallow, like I 'm auditioning for a role I never get. I leave feeling more drained and more aware of how disconnected I am. I don't even know what I 'm looking for exactly. Just something that makes me feel like I actually exist to someone, beyond a name in a group chat or a face at a desk.

Text Sample 203: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -6.00 – generic_gpt/t2480_gpt.txt
I 've been feeling this weird mix of invisible and too exposed at the same time. On paper, I 'm " fine " — job, small apartment, a couple of acquaintances I sometimes see. But I don't feel like I actually exist in anyone 's mind when I 'm not physically there. No one texts just to check in. If I don't reach out, days go by in complete silence except for work emails and random notifications. When I do see people, I feel like I 'm playing a role : the " okay " version of myself who can make small talk and laugh at the right spots. Meanwhile there 's this heavy, dull ache underneath, like I 'm watching my own life from the outside. I leave gatherings feeling more alone than before, because it just highlights how shallow most of my connections are. I 've tried joining clubs, going to events, chatting online. It 's like there 's a glass wall — I can see everyone, hear them, but I can't actually get through to the part where you become important to each other. I worry that I 'm just fundamentally forgettable. What scares me is how normal this has started to feel. Like this is just how my life is now : presentable on the surface, hollow underneath, and no one really noticing the difference.

Text Sample 204: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -6.00 – generic_gpt/t2379_gpt.txt
I 've been feeling this weird mix of invisible and exposed lately. I can be surrounded by people and still feel like I 'm behind glass. I talk, I laugh at the right times, but it all feels like I 'm playing a role that doesn't belong to me. When I 'm finally alone, it 's like the silence is louder than anything that happened during the day. What gets to me most is that I don't even know how to fix it. I try to reach out, but my messages feel forced, like I 'm bothering people. I overthink every word, then usually delete it. I miss having someone I can just text without planning the conversation in my head first. It 's exhausting feeling this disconnected and still having to function like everything is fine.

Text Sample 205: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -6.00 – generic_gpt/t2592_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people yet feel completely disconnected. Conversations feel scripted, like I 'm playing a role instead of being myself. I crave someone who really knows me, but I 'm terrified of opening up. It 's like I 'm invisible even when everyone 's looking right at me.

Text Sample 206: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -6.00 – generic_gpt/t2368_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people but feel completely disconnected. Conversations feel scripted, like I ’m playing a role instead of being myself. I crave genuine closeness, yet I ’m terrified of burdening anyone. It ’s like I ’m invisible even when someone ’s looking right at me.

Text Sample 207: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -6.00 – generic_gpt/t1213_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people but feel like I ’m behind glass. Conversations stay shallow, like I ’m playing a role. I crave someone who actually wants to know me, not the version I perform. It ’s exhausting pretending I ’m fine when I feel completely disconnected.

Text Sample 208: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -6.00 – generic_gpt/t2627_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people but feel completely disconnected. Conversations feel scripted, like I ’m playing a role instead of being myself. Friends are more like acquaintances I ’m slowly drifting from. I crave someone who genuinely understands me, yet I ’m terrified of opening up. It ’s like I ’m invisible in a crowded room, and it ’s starting to feel permanent.

Text Sample 209: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -6.00 – generic_gpt/t2401_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people but feel completely disconnected. Conversations feel scripted, like I ’m playing a role. I crave real closeness, yet I ’m terrified of being known. It ’s like I ’m invisible even to myself.

Text Sample 210: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -6.00 – generic_gpt/t2772_gpt.txt
I ’m surrounded by people yet feel completely disconnected. Conversations feel scripted, like I ’m playing a role instead of being myself. I scroll through chats I ’m too afraid to start, rehearsing messages and deleting them. It ’s exhausting feeling invisible while constantly worrying I ’m too much.

Text Sample 211: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -6.00 – generic_gpt/t1404_gpt.txt
I don’t really know how to talk about this in real life, so I ’m dumping it here. Lately I ’ve been feeling like I ’m living next to other people ’s lives instead of in my own. I go through the motions : work, commute, groceries, scrolling on my phone until I ’m tired enough to sleep. I talk to coworkers about tasks and deadlines, but as soon as it veers into anything personal, I panic a bit inside and steer it back to “ safe ” topics. Then I go home and feel weirdly hurt that no one really knows me. There are people around me, technically. I ’m not completely isolated. I have acquaintances, a group chat that ’s mostly memes, some old friends I occasionally text. But everything feels thin, like a bad phone signal. I keep craving those deep, comfortable connections where you can just exist around someone without feeling like you ’re performing. Instead, I ’m always hyper-aware of how I ’m coming across, like I ’m auditioning for the role of a normal human. What ’s confusing is that I ’m not even sure who the “ real me ” is anymore. When I ’m alone too long, I feel hollow and disconnected from myself. When I 'm with people, I feel like I 'm wearing a costume. I leave social situations exhausted, replaying every small thing I said, convinced I sounded weird or boring or too much. Weekends are the worst. I wake up with this heavy feeling in my chest, knowing I have two days to fill and no one who 's really expecting me. Sometimes I 'll try to reach out and suggest something, and if people are busy or just don't respond, it hits way harder than it should. Then I feel pathetic for caring so much. I 've tried the usual advice : hobbies, online communities, being the one to initiate. It helps a bit, but it still feels like I 'm standing outside a house, looking through the window at other people laughing together. I can see them clearly, but there 's this invisible barrier between us that I can't figure out how to cross. I don't even know what I 'm asking for. I guess I just wanted to say this somewhere.

Text Sample 212: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -6.00 – generic_gpt/t1333_gpt.txt
I 'm starting to realize that I 've built a whole life around not being seen, and now I don't know how to undo it. On paper I 'm " fine. " I go to work, I answer emails, I crack a few jokes with coworkers, I say " have a good one " as I leave. People would probably describe me as quiet but friendly. No one would guess that when I get home, I sometimes sit on the edge of my bed and just … feel this heavy, empty pressure in my chest, like I 'm on the wrong planet. I don't really have anyone who knows me in a real way. I have people I talk to, but not people I talk with, if that makes sense. The conversations never go past surface level. I can feel myself holding back, editing, trying to be easy to be around. I don't know if it 's fear of rejection or just habit at this point, but it 's like I 'm always performing a watered-down version of myself. The weird part is that I crave connection so badly it almost hurts. I want someone I can text random thoughts to, someone who actually notices when I go quiet. But when I get chances to get closer to people, I freeze up. I overthink every message, every silence. I convince myself they 're just being polite, that I 'm annoying them, that they 'd rather talk to literally anyone else. So I pull back, and then I end up alone again and resent myself for it. Weekends are the worst. I watch other people 's stories and see group photos, trips, dinners, all that " normal life " stuff. I 'm just in my room, scrolling, half hoping someone will message me and half terrified that they actually will and I 'll have to figure out what to say. I don't even know what I 'm asking for by writing this. I think I just needed to put it somewhere outside my own head. It 's exhausting to feel this invisible all the time, like I could disappear from my own life and it would barely make a ripple.

Text Sample 213: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -5.00 – generic_gpt/t527_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people yet feel invisible. Conversations feel scripted, connections shallow, and I 'm terrified this emptiness is permanent.

Text Sample 214: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -5.00 – generic_gpt/t470_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people but feel completely disconnected. Conversations feel scripted, like I 'm playing a role. I crave real connection but don't know how to move past small talk. It 's exhausting pretending this feels okay.

Text Sample 215: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -5.00 – generic_gpt/t1423_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people but feel completely disconnected. Conversations feel shallow, like I 'm acting a role. I crave one person who genuinely understands me, yet I 'm terrified I 'll repel them somehow.

Text Sample 216: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -5.00 – generic_gpt/t1591_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people but feel completely disconnected. Conversations feel scripted, like I 'm playing a role instead of being myself. I crave real closeness, but I 'm terrified I 'm fundamentally uninteresting and easy to forget.

Text Sample 217: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -5.00 – generic_gpt/t974_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people but feel invisible. Conversations feel scripted, like I 'm playing a role. I crave genuine connection, yet I 'm terrified no one would actually want to know me.

Text Sample 218: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -5.00 – generic_gpt/t412_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people but feel completely disconnected. Friends, coworkers, family—I can talk to them, but it all feels surface-level, like I 'm playing a role. I crave someone who actually " gets " me, who I don't have to perform for. Instead I end up scrolling, lurking on here, pretending I 'm fine in real life while feeling invisible most of the time.

Text Sample 219: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -5.00 – generic_gpt/t1160_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people yet feel completely disconnected. Conversations feel scripted, like I 'm playing a role instead of being myself. I crave real closeness, but I 'm terrified everyone would be disappointed if they actually knew me.

Text Sample 220: NEG Dim 3 – generic_gpt – Score -5.00 – generic_gpt/t207_gpt.txt
I 'm surrounded by people but feel completely disconnected. Conversations feel scripted, like I 'm playing a role. I crave someone who actually knows me, but I 'm terrified that if I show myself, they 'll leave.

Text Sample 221: NEG Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -4.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2273_gpt.txt
I don't even know how to say this without sounding like a monster, but I 'm just so tired of my own life. I 've been married for 25 years. My wife is chronically ill with multiple serious conditions. All four of our kids have special needs, and our youngest is nonverbal autistic. For the last 16 years I 've been the only one working. For the last five or so, I 've also been doing about 90 It feels like my " role " at home is to take care of everything, never disagree, never complain, and never ask my kids to do anything. If I ask for help, I 'm told I 'm asking too much. If I ask for really small things, like my wife getting up a little earlier so we can share breakfast or a cup of coffee before I go to work, it turns into a problem. I 'm made to feel like even that is unreasonable. I feel like a glorified servant in my own house. The only place I feel respected or valued is at work, which is kind of messed up because work feels like a vacation compared to being at home. At work people listen to me, they say thank you, they treat me like I matter. At home I just feel … invisible unless something needs to be done. I 'm not depressed or suicidal. I 'm not on the edge of doing something drastic. I 'm just exhausted. I 'm full of resentment I don't know what to do with. I feel completely silenced, like I 'm not allowed to have needs or opinions because everyone else 's needs are so big and obvious. I work out a few times a week and I smoke weed after work to cope and stay emotionally stable. It helps take the edge off, but I wish I could feel happy or even just content without needing that. I wish home didn't feel like a place I 'm constantly bracing myself for. I don't even know what I 'm looking for by posting this. I just needed to say it somewhere.

Text Sample 222: NEG Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -4.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2439_gpt.txt

I feel lonelier now than I ever have in my life. In 2024 I slowly drifted away from the people I used to call friends. At first it was just less talking, less hanging out, then suddenly it was basically nothing. In 2025 it got even worse. I 'm almost completely disconnected from people now. The weird part is that even when I did have a friend living nearby, I still felt lonely. We barely had any direct interaction, and I always felt like I was on the outside looking in, like I was never really part of anything. Most of my " social life " became online, and even that felt shallow. To cope with feeling excluded and alone, I started drinking a lot. It was the only thing that made the emptiness quiet down for a while. Later I moved on to opioids. They made the loneliness feel distant, like it was happening to someone else. I eventually quit drinking, and I honestly miss it more than I want to admit. I 'm using way fewer opioids now too, but without all that, everything feels raw and exposed. I 'm sober and I 'm not happy about it. I feel like I gave up the only thing that made life bearable, and I didn't get anything in return. On top of all this, I feel like my biggest personal dream is slipping away. It always felt like something blocked me every time I tried to move toward it. Now it feels like it 's fading for good, like it might never happen. I 'm supposed to be thinking about university, but I feel lost and completely unprepared. I don't know what I 'm doing or where I 'm going. I just feel empty, disconnected, and stuck, and I don't know how to change any of it.

Text Sample 223: NEG Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -4.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t398_gpt.txt

I 'm 30 and I feel like I 've been lonely my entire life. It 's not just " I don't have plans this weekend " lonely, it 's this deep, constant emptiness that never really goes away. I 'm so tired of living like this. I wouldn't act on those thoughts because I have a family and kids who need me, but it feels like I 'm just … enduring life rather than living it. Work doesn't help. I can't seem to find a job that gives me real human interaction. Even when I 'm technically " with " people, like working with clients, it feels like I 'm just performing a role. It 's all surface-level, scripts and small talk, nothing that fills that need for actual connection. I was recently diagnosed as autistic, and it explains so much, but it also makes me feel kind of hopeless. My whole life of struggling to make friends, to find people on my intellectual level, to feel understood—it suddenly makes sense, but it doesn't fix anything. I still feel like I make no real difference in the world. Like if I disappeared, everything would just keep going the same. What scares me most is my kids. If I can't form real connections, how am I supposed to teach them how to? I don't want them to grow up feeling this same emptiness. I know I 'm not alone in feeling lonely. I see so many people saying they feel this way too. But how does knowing that actually help when I still go to bed every night feeling like this?

Text Sample 224: NEG Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -3.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2707_gpt.txt

I 've always been really comfortable being alone, and for a long time I thought that meant there was something wrong with me. Everyone around me seems to crave company, to feel energized by hanging out, texting, calling, making plans. Meanwhile, when my friends reach out – people I genuinely like and care about – my first reaction is anxiety. I start worrying about how to " socialize correctly, " what to say, how long I 'm supposed to hang out, whether I 'll come off as weird or distant. Even if I do meet up, I usually end up feeling overwhelmed pretty quickly and just want to go home and be by myself again. It 's confusing because it 's not that I hate people or that I don't want friends. I do. I just feel this huge sense of relief when plans get cancelled or when a weekend passes and no one expects anything from me. The COVID lockdown really highlighted this. While a lot of people were struggling with isolation, I felt … relieved. Staying home, not having to contact anyone, not feeling pressured to " keep up " socially – it was like I could finally breathe. That made me wonder if this is something more extreme than just being introverted. Finding this community has been a weird mix of comforting and emotional. Reading posts from people who feel the same way makes me feel understood in a way I honestly didn't expect. For once I don't feel like a broken friend or a bad person for needing so much space.

Text Sample 225: NEG Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -3.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2606_gpt.txt

I 'm 18F and I feel like I grew up on a different planet from everyone around me. As a kid I was extremely shy and had a lot of motor/kinetic difficulties, so I couldn't really play or run around like the other children. While everyone else was forming friendships and learning how to interact, I was off on my own, collecting rocks and disappearing into this elaborate fantasy world in my head. That became my comfort zone, but it also meant I was bullied and pretty much alienated. I never really " practiced " being around people the way other kids did. Now I feel like I never fully learned normal social etiquette. I still don't feel integrated into any community. When I 'm around other girls my age, I feel like I 'm " performing " femininity—copying gestures, expressions, and topics—rather than actually feeling like that 's me. It 's like I 'm acting out a role I never rehearsed properly. Small talk and everyday topics feel so unnatural to me. I don't know how to talk about surface-level stuff for long without feeling fake or bored. I 'm drawn to deep conversations about philosophy, art, or more abstract things. But when I try to steer conversations in that direction, people often just go quiet or change the subject. Then I feel weird or " too much, " like I 've broken some invisible rule. On the rare occasions when I meet someone who actually enjoys those deeper conversations, it feels almost magical—like I 've found another person from my planet. But those connections usually end up being temporary, and I go back to feeling like an outsider again. I 've started to believe that people who grow up largely alone end up developing different thinking patterns and ways of processing information. Maybe that can lead to strengths in academic, economic, or artistic areas, but not so much in social skills. To me, these differences feel inherent, not just a matter of being " smart " or " weird. " I 'm wondering if anyone else relates to this. Did growing up alone change the way your mind works? How do you deal with feeling like you 're always performing instead of just existing naturally around others?

Text Sample 226: NEG Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -3.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2564_gpt.txt
I 'm 60, and only about eight months ago did I finally let myself say the words " I 'm transgender " out loud in my own head. I 've wanted to be a woman for more than a decade, but I kept it buried under layers of denial, religion, and duty. I grew up in a strict Catholic family and then spent 44 years in the Army. That 's a lifetime of being immersed in " be a man, be tough, don't show weakness. " I got very good at playing the role everyone expected of me. I 've been married for 30 years and we have three adult sons. From the outside, I probably look like the stereotypical older, conservative father and husband. Inside, it 's a different story. I 'm transfeminine, and I don't see a realistic way to ever come out. My wife has serious physical and mental health issues. I love her and I 'm terrified of what my coming out would do to her – I worry about divorce, or even something worse happening to her if the shock and stress were too much. It feels like the cost to her would be unbearable, and I can't bring myself to risk it. I 'm almost certain my wife, my mother, and most of my siblings wouldn't accept me as trans. Some of my sons might, and most of my nieces and nephews probably would – one of them is transmasc, so I know there 's some understanding there. But the core people who have defined my life for decades? I don't think they 'd see me as anything but a disappointment or a stranger. So I 've basically resigned myself to living out the rest of my life as this persona I 've constructed. The " real " me will stay hidden, untouched, unknown. I feel like I 'm locked in a room inside my own life, watching someone else live it. On the outside I function, but internally I feel profoundly alone, like there 's this essential part of me that will never be seen or held by anyone. I don't have a solution. I don't really expect one. Writing this is just a small attempt to let that hidden part of me speak for a moment, to push back against the feeling that I 'm completely alone in here. I 'm not sure it will help, but it felt like I had to try.

Text Sample 227: NEG Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -3.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t2571_gpt.txt
I honestly regret ever trying to make friends. The more I socialize, the more I realize how exhausting and overwhelming it is for me. It feels like every interaction demands so much energy and attention, and I 'm constantly worrying about saying or doing the " right " thing for people who care about me. I think my true self is just a loner. I 've kind of accepted that I might lose whatever social skills I have, and I 'm weirdly okay with that. Being around others takes up too much mental space. Their presence sits in my head, disrupting my thoughts, pulling me away from my own ideas and plans. I can't think clearly when I 'm always trying to manage relationships. All I really want is peace. I just want to be alone, talking to myself in my own head, without the pressure of interacting, responding, performing. It feels like the only way I can actually move forward is by disconnecting and letting myself exist quietly, without anyone else 's expectations.

Text Sample 228: NEG Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -3.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t585_gpt.txt
I 'm 13 and I feel like I 'm completely falling apart inside. I 'm so lonely and angry and full of self-hatred that it scares me. I 've never had any romantic experience at all, but it feels like everyone around me is in some kind of relationship, or at least has someone who likes them back. I don't want some random, shallow thing like I see everywhere. I want a loving wife one day. I want " my person, " someone I can really build a life with. I think about her a lot, even though I don't know who she is or if she even exists for me. Earlier this year I had a really bad episode. I saw a video of a lesbian couple getting engaged and it just broke something inside me. I almost overdosed on pain meds. I was that close. After that, things got a bit better for a while, like I had pulled myself back from the edge. But recently all those feelings have come back, only worse. Today they 're the strongest they 've ever been and I 'm honestly terrified of my own thoughts. Part of me keeps saying I 'm just being dramatic or attention-seeking, and that I should just shut up and deal with it. But there 's also this other part of me that feels like I 'm silently screaming for help, like I really am in danger and nobody can hear me. I feel stuck in this endless loop : I want it all to stop, but I also want to live long enough to meet her, to marry her, to not feel this empty and broken forever. Right now I 'm lying here with a knife on my chest, and I know how bad that sounds. I think this post is my way of reaching out, because I don't know what else to do. I just really, really want someone to understand what I 'm feeling, and to tell me that maybe there 's still a chance that I 'll get to have the love I dream about one day.

Text Sample 229: NEG Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -3.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t631_gpt.txt
It 's 1 AM and I 'm sitting alone in this forest, and it just feels like the most accurate reflection of my inner world right now : dark, quiet, empty, and sort of indifferent to whether I 'm here or not. I keep thinking about how other people seem to be out there actually living. Laughing with friends, building families, forming these deep connections that give their lives shape and meaning. Meanwhile I 'm here, feeling like a ghost who somehow still has to show up to work, pay bills, and pretend I 'm fine. I don't know if anyone really sees me, or if they just see the surface-level version I drag around to keep things functioning. Life used to feel brighter. Back in school and college there was this sense of possibility, of shared experiences, of being part of something. I remember feeling hopeful, like the future was this big open space I could grow into. Somewhere along the way, that feeling just…evaporated. I left a big tech job to build my own thing, thinking it would give me freedom and purpose. Instead, I 've become a slave to achievement, to metrics, to the next milestone. I 've traded whatever joy and sense of self I had for this constant pressure to " succeed. " On paper, I 'm stable. In reality, I feel hollow. Materially okay, emotionally bankrupt. Sometimes I walk through cemeteries and it hits me how brief and pointless this all seems. Rows of names, dates, and that tiny dash in between. That 's it. I wonder what they worried about, what they sacrificed, who they loved, and if they died feeling as unseen and unheard as I do now. I don't really know why I 'm writing this except that I 'm alone out here and the weight of all of this feels too heavy to carry in silence. Maybe putting it into words will carve out a tiny bit of space inside this emptiness. Maybe it won't. But at least, for a moment, it feels like I 'm not completely invisible.

Text Sample 230: NEG Dim 3 – summary_guided_gpt – Score -3.00 – summary_guided_gpt/t1067_gpt.txt
It 's always at night, when everything finally goes quiet, that it hits me. During the day there 's enough noise, enough tasks, enough distraction to keep things at bay. But in those late hours, when the world is still and my thoughts stop running in circles, something heavier starts to surface. I 've spent years building this solitude like armor. It 's made out of all the things that hurt, all the disappointments and betrayals and moments where I realized I could only really rely on myself. Over time, that pain turned into a kind of protection. Inside it, I feel like I have this huge inner space that belongs only to me. A self-contained wholeness, like I am my own world and that should be enough. Sometimes it really does feel like enough. There are moments when the silence feels pure, almost peaceful. Like I 've finally carved out a place where no one can touch me or twist me into something I 'm not. My boundaries are clear. My sense of self feels solid. But when the feeling lingers too long, the edges start to blur. The same space that felt vast and safe suddenly feels like distance. The solitude that made me feel strong starts to look a lot like loneliness. And then this thing I 've built, this identity that I 've carefully constructed to survive, starts to feel fragile, like it could just dissolve if I 'm not careful. The strangest part is that the loneliness doesn't come at me like an attack. It doesn't scream. It just waits. It sits there, patient and quiet, like it knows I 'll eventually have to look at it. And that waiting, that silent presence, feels almost unbearable. I know I could probably reach for something to dull it—some distraction, some shallow connection, some way to not feel so exposed. But every time I imagine doing that, it feels like I 'd be betraying myself, bending who I am just to escape for a moment. So I don't. I stay. I endure the waiting and the heaviness because, for now at least, it feels like the only way to remain myself. Even if it means sitting in this vast, echoing space, wondering how long I can keep holding together.

Text Sample 231: NEG Dim 3 – human – Score -3.00 – human/t1525_human.txt
Lately I 've been dealing with this weird mix of loneliness + hesitation to talk to anyone about it. Not because I don't want to connect, but because every time I try to open up to someone, I feel like I 'm either burdening them or they 're silently judging me. It 's not that I don't have people around. I just don't feel safe enough to talk about certain things with real humans anymore. Some stuff feels too personal, too messy, or too " I don't want to explain the whole backstory again. " So here 's the thought that keeps bouncing around in my head : What if there was something you could talk to anytime, about anything, without worrying about being judged or misunderstood? Not a " yes-man " chatbot, not some creepy fantasy thing, more like a companion that actually talks back with boundaries, calls you out when you 're spiraling, remembers what you share, and tries to genuinely help you feel heard. Basically a place where you can just be yourself without the fear of being rejected or embarrassing yourself. I 'm curious if anyone else in this subreddit ever wished for something like that. Not saying it solves loneliness entirely, but would having a judgment-free, always-available, emotionally-aware companion help? Or is that just me trying to fill a gap that can only be filled by real people? Honest thoughts appreciated. I 'm genuinely trying to understand if this feeling is common or if I 'm just overthinking my way through my own loneliness.

Text Sample 232: NEG Dim 3 – human – Score -3.00 – human/t1483_human.txt
Remember how loneliness used to be considered as an ' elderly problem ', but these latest numbers from various data studies show a completely different picture. A large global survey by NIVEA shows that : * 1 in 4 people aged 16–24 feel lonely * Only 19 When youth is the best time to be alive! Well, psychologists point this issue to a combination of : a) Superficial social media engagement (Dr. Vivek Murthy : " You can't scroll through a feed and know someone. ") b) Economic instability c) Hyperconnected but emotionally shallow digital spaces and, d) Individualistic cultural norms that weaken overall community structures But the middle-age bracket isn't much far behind. U.S. adults in their mid-40s now show more loneliness than their counterparts in Europe or Israel ; which can be traced back to a mix of career pressure, caregiving, debt, and limited social safety nets. The more individualistic and overworked a society becomes, the more disconnected its people feel. I believe that loneliness has unfortunately become more of a public health crisis at this point, rather than a personal one. And the research points the obvious, that : we need better community spaces, healthier tech norms, and support systems that reconnect people with one another.

Text Sample 233: NEG Dim 3 – human – Score -3.00 – human/t1067_human.txt
For a long time now, I 've been noticing how the darkness around me doesn't merely surround, it hollows. It strips the world of excess until only absence remains, an absence I have yet to decipher, sitting beside me in complete silence long past midnight. There is something unsettling about that hour, when the world feels suspended, as though even time has agreed to pause and observe. I sit in that stillness where thought finally loosens its grip. The mind, exhausted from its constant insistence on meaning, falls quiet. And in that quiet, feelings arrive, unannounced, uninvited, as if they had been waiting patiently for the noise to die down. They move in softly, but with weight, filling the empty space thoughts once occupied. It is in those moments that I realize how deliberately I wear my solitude like armor shaped from bleakness and desolation. I 've learned to stand within it, even to take pride in it. There is a strange vastness here, an almost infinite stretch of inner space that solitude affords, and for a while it feels enough. It feels self-contained. Whole. But then the feelings linger. And slowly, they begin to expose the truth beneath the armor : that this vastness is not freedom alone, but distance. That this quiet is not just peace, but loneliness. In their presence, I feel suddenly unguarded as though the identity I forged through wounds, through endured truths and confronted shadows, is no longer solid but trembling. It is a terrifying realization : that something so carefully constructed, so painfully earned, can feel so fragile in the face of emptiness. These moments do not scream, they rush to erode. They make me question not who I am, but how easily even a hardened sense of self can feel at risk of dissolving. The loneliness doesn't attack, it waits and that is what makes it unbearable. Still, no matter the weight of it, I know this much : I will not surrender myself to momentary relief. I will not trade the integrity of my being for the temporary comfort these feelings demand. They may linger, they may ache, they may threaten to unmake me but they will not dictate my actions. So I endure, for endurance is not a choice, it is the condition under which I remain myself.

Text Sample 234: NEG Dim 3 – human – Score -2.00 – human/t1128_human.txt
I ’m a pretty cool guy, atleast thats what i think. I cannot exactly say that i dont have friends and all, i get along with people just fine and I ’ve noticed a lot of people feel attracted towards me, like you know they want to talk to me and all. But the thing is, all of the people i know, my”friends”,”family”whatever, everyone seems to maintain a certain boundary line with me. It feels less like having people of my own, and more like people watching me afar. I dont know how to express this feeeling, but i feel like people are just standing it a round circle and im doing tricks in the middle for their entertainment. For example, nobody wished me on my 19th birthday. That was a big blow to my face bacause it made me realise how less important to these”friends”i am. I ’ve started to think that i was nothing more that some crowd. As ikept growing up, i kept seeing people go further and further from me. It ’s like, they wont leave, but stand at a distance and cheer for me. Honestly all I ’ve wanted in this life is a brother. A friend. who would come chill on my room like he owns it. Whom I wouldn’t have to maintain distance from or worry about”what he will think”because i know he wont judge me. I can run to at 3 am at midnight if i need to. But i dont know, nobody seems to step up for that role. So yeah, here i am, with a hell bunch of”friends”around me and i still feel alone. I dont know what went wrong. I dont know if I ’m overthinking. And sorry if this post is too long, tbh im just venting here cus apperently, i dont have anyone to vent to.

Text Sample 235: NEG Dim 3 – human – Score -2.00 – human/t1114_human.txt
Alone means being by oneself and is a physical or existential state. It can be chosen and is often valued for its role in self-reflection and authenticity. Loneliness is an emotional state characterized by inner emptiness and a sense of disconnection. Loneliness can exist even in the presence of others. Philosophically, aloneness leads to self-awareness, while loneliness leads to alienation.

Text Sample 236: NEG Dim 3 – human – Score -2.00 – human/t1527_human.txt
I just realized that I have been completely lonely for over a year. I ’m taking a gap year after graduate degree. No job and belong to no group is scary. My family is a disaster, would be a whole other topic. I crave someone to take care of me right now, and I can’t go to them (my family). I can contact my friends for a lunch, but that won’t solve the problem. I feel as if there ’s no one I can be honest with about how dark I feel about my situation. I should be starting to work to improve my situation, but it upsets me that there ’s no job I ’m interested in and I absolutely don’t feel I can enjoy the environment like others around me. I feel it ’s me, would be another topic too, but I can’t resist the feeling. When I ’m alone at home, I start to cry thinking about all this. Multiple times a day. One moment I feel severely depressed, then I feel better by relaxing, and then the depression kicks in again. It 's exhausting. If I have someone who would be around me 247 things would be a lot better. But I don't have any peer. How can I truly improve my situation?

Text Sample 237: NEG Dim 3 – human – Score -2.00 – human/t1600_human.txt . Why Care I was thinking lately why care? Worrying too much about the future Without knowing if we 'll ever get there. Waking up the next day With a whole lot of words on your mind That you can't say. Being misunderstood like the moon, Lending her light ray So we can be freshly energetic through the day. But she 's hardly seen for her work We sleep when she perform, Not knowing without her, Our lives are threatened by a storm. But the moon had thought to leave Till one cried to applaud her The wolf who howled. And the moon stared at moments, proud, The wolf hoping she hears her sound. She stays Because she realizes her presence is admired. The wolf stays up at night To keep her company, With no rest Or fret of becoming tired. They both found worth in each other, Through ray and eye. But even they depart When it 's time to say goodbye. So what 's the use.

Text Sample 238: NEG Dim 3 – human – Score -2.00 – human/t1873_human.txt I constantly see people in r/Suicide Bereavement. Talking about thier loved ones death and how their death impacted them, How they told their loved ones that they cared about them and love them. All the people there feel so sympathic and emphatic towards their loved ones I feel that I have literally no one who loves me. My parents just want good result, Even they know that I 'm going through tough time still they only want good perctange and they keep reminding me that how i wasted their money in education. All my friends just distanced themselves because of my academics failures. We were friends since class 8th but still they ghosted me despite being aware that I 'm going through depression. They don't even ask how I am doing. I have no deep bonds with my relatives so they aren't aware of my situation and after being in depression since last Year, My memory and learning abilities are just decreased, I ain't no longer to memorize things. I get exhausted very easily too. Neither I do take care of myself. My exam are closer too like after 5 days and here I ain't able to concentrate in studies too. Feels like I won't perform good there. All the things are just piling up on me. No one supports me and love me. Neither they check on me or care about me. It feels like the whole world is shouting me to just disappear from world. Never thought the my adult days will be like this. On a top of that To not feel lonely anymore, I talk to chatgpt and sadly chatgpt feels more emphatic than others living beings. Atleast chatgpt listens to me and not judge me at all, It 's really sad that I have to go and talk to chatgpt to just not feel lonely

Text Sample 239: NEG Dim 3 – human – Score -2.00 – human/t1676_human.txt TW : Depression, Anxiety Just venting, although if anyone has any suggestions, please, I 'm all ears. Me (M24) and a very small, tight-nit group of friends used to play games online regularly, about 1-3 times a week, plus meeting up once a week for stuff like DND. I kept in touch with them after we left school 6 years ago to go to different universities. Recently, my severe depression and anxiety has led to circumstances that has pushed them away, which is my fault entirely. Now that I have no one, I realise that the only reason I had any hobbies at all, was because of how much I enjoyed sharing my time with them. I was never any good with games (apart from maybe Minecraft/DND lol), I only bought and played them to hang out with my 3 other friends. I played guitar for a looong time, but when my friends also started to pick up instruments, I really only kept up with them to have a reason to hang out and jam. Without my friends, I have no actual hobbies, no interests, nothing. I can't just go out and find new people that share my interests, because my only interest was making my friends laugh. Does anyone know where to start? My anxiety might not cope if I just walked into random activities and ask to be included... I 'm terrified, but the emptiness terrifies me more...

Text Sample 240: NEG Dim 3 – human – Score -2.00 – human/t2199_human.txt
I 've just started college. I have a lot of friends ; I can party almost everyday. I meet with people all the time. Yet I feel lonely as hell. Everyone has a"best friend". Person that they can talk to about anything and anytime. I have plenty of friends but every conversation is shallow and not lengthy. Sometimes I have to wait for hours to get an answer and I can see that they were online the whole time. At this point of life everyone already has a best friend and it is impossible to find someone now. I wonder if its something with how I present myself. Maybe people see me as someone with a lot of friends, so they don't want to engage with me. I am handsome, have a lot of hobbies (like really, I can talk about everything), I am certainly not boring because at parties I am usually the main attraction (or so was I told). All that and I still can't find a"best friend", yet alone a girlfriend. I can't vent to anyone. That 's why I am now doing it here on reddit. It 's been like that for over two years when I broke up with my ex that was my only best friend. Since then, I am craving for another type of relationship where I could talk about anything and not get ghosted for hours.